VATICAN CITY — Christians should pray on Pentecost that the Holy Spirit would give them the courage and strength to share the Gospel, Pope Francis said.

“No matter how difficult the situation may be — and indeed, at times it may seem there is no room for the Gospel message — we must not give up and we must not forsake pursuing what is essential in our Christian life, namely evangelization,” the pope said May 24, the Wednesday before Pentecost.

Using the example of St. Andrew Kim Taegon, the 19th-century Korean martyr, Pope Francis continued his weekly general audience talks about the “zeal” to evangelize.

With thousands of visitors and pilgrims — including bands, flag twirlers and dancers — gathered in a sunny St. Peter’s Square, the pope introduced his talk about St. Andrew by pointing out how Christianity was introduced to Korea 200 years before St. Andrew by laypeople who had heard the Gospel proclaimed in China and then shared it when they returned home.

“Baptized laypeople were the ones who spread the faith. There were no priests,” the pope said. “Would we be able to do something like that?”

Ordained in 1844, St. Andrew Kim Taegon was the first Korean-born priest and ministered at a time of anti-Christian persecution.

Pope Francis told the story of how when the saint was still a seminarian, he was sent to welcome missionaries who snuck into the country from abroad. After walking far through the snow, “he fell to the ground exhausted, risking unconsciousness and freezing. At that point, he suddenly heard a voice, ‘Get up, walk!’”

“This experience of the great Korean witness makes us understand a very important aspect of apostolic zeal: namely, the courage to get back up when one falls,” the pope said.

“Each one of us might think, ‘But how can I evangelize,’” he said. Following the example of the “greats” of evangelization history, each Christian can find a way to witness to the Gospel — “talk about Jesus” — in his or her family, among friends and in one’s local community.

“Let us prepare to receive the Holy Spirit this coming Pentecost, asking for that grace, apostolic grace and courage, the grace to evangelize, to always carry forward the message of Jesus.”
As executive director prepares to pedal into retirement,
Catholic Charities opens Pickett’s Corner in his honor

The staff and board members of Catholic Charities, Diocese of Covington, found a way to not only celebrate Alan Pickett, executive director, as he begins retirement, May 26, but also to begin a new ministry in his honor — Pickett’s Corner. Pickett’s Corner at Parish Kitchen, Covington, will repair and distribute bicycles to those in need. Mr. Pickett is an avid cyclist. In fact, one of his first retirement adventures includes an extended bicycle trip.

Bicycles are a cost effective and efficient form of transportation that many guests of the Parish Kitchen use as a primary means of getting around town, especially to their jobs. But like everything else, bicycles require proper maintenance and sometimes costly repairs — obstacles that can leave a person already struggling even further in the dust.

Through the generosity of donors and volunteers to Pickett’s Corner, the obstacle of bicycle repair will soon be just a bump in the road.

“This is just another way to support the people we serve beyond just a meal,” said Mr. Pickett in an interview with the Messenger.

Pickett’s Corner held its grand opening in early May, repairing a few bikes and receiving and distributing a couple of bicycles. The bicycle repair shop will be open on a regular schedule when volunteer staffing is available. Volunteers are needed to be present at Pickett’s Corner during lunchtime, 11:30 a.m. – 1:30 p.m., to repair bikes. Donors are also needed to collect and repair bikes at their home for distribution at Pickett’s Corner. For now, Parish Kitchen will post a sign announcing the days Pickett’s Corner will be open so that guests will know a day or two in advance when to bring their bike in for repair.

“They hope is that they can come up with a plan that would enable them to be onsite on a regular basis,” Mr. Pickett said.

During his nine years leading Catholic Charities, a lot of challenges and changes occurred. The Parish Kitchen moved from its longtime home on Pike Street to its new home on the corner of Madison Avenue and 16th Street. During the construction, COVID hit and was years in the making and that COVID threatened to stall even longer is the Food for Friends Mobile Food Pantry. The Mobile Food Pantry made its first stop in Bracken County in August 2020.

“I give Father Joey Shelton a large dose of credit for what we were able to do,” said Mr. Pickett.

Father Shelton was newly assigned pastor at St. Augustine Parish, Augusta and St. James Parish, Brooksville at the time Mr. Pickett said that Father Shelton saw the Mobile Pantry as a way for him and his parish to be evangelists in “really a non-Catholic area.”

“He [Father Shelton] said, I’m ready. I want to do this, we can do this,” said Mr. Pickett. And they did, with some modifications to allow for social distancing and the safety of patrons.

After its initial stop in Bracken County the Mobile Food Pantry took off and now serves six of the southern and eastern counties of the Diocese — Gallatin County, Grant County, Owen County and Mason County.

“Our goal was to be in six counties, and we are now in those six counties that we serve once a month,” said Mr. Pickett, adding that there are two additional counties asking to be added. “So, we may expand beyond the six that we targeted,” he said.

One of the difficult decisions Mr. Pickett had to make was the dissolution of Catholic Charities’ foundational service, it’s adoption program.

“It’s been a year since we made that decision and I still get feedback from folks that are disappointed in us for not continuing that work. Our hearts go out to those families,” Mr. Pickett said.

While the decision to end the adoption program was difficult, the truth of the matter, Mr. (Continued on page 4) above right Bishop Emeritus Roger Foys welcomed 10 men and women as novices to the Oblates of St. Benedict, St. Cosmos Deaneley, May 20, at St. Benedict Church, Covington. “It is significant that we’re doing this here at St. Benedict Church because the Benedict monks, whose archabbey we follow, staffed this church from its very beginning over 100 years ago until 1980 when the last Benedictine pastor was called home,” said Bishop Foys. “This church is steeped in Benedictine history.”

Franciscan Daughters welcome new novice

On May 13, the Feast of Our Lady of Fatima, the Franciscan Daughters of Mary welcomed its newest sister, Sister Sara, into the novitiate. As part of the ceremony, she received the habit of her community and a new name to signify her new life. Sister Sara’s new name is now Sister Agnes Mary of the Precious Blood.

Finding Gregory

Four statues of the four Doctors of the Western Church: St. Ambrose, St. Augustine, St. Jerome and St. Gregory the Great, were on the pulpit of the former St. Boniface Church, Ludlow. Three of the four statues have found their way to the Chancery; only St. Gregory is missing (see related column page 7). In an appeal to the people of the Diocese, Jamie Schroeder, chancellor, is seeking to solve the mystery of the case of the missing statue so that the four statues may be photographed together and documented. Pickett said, was that the program had already discontin-ued on its own. Due to a major cultural shift away from focusing on what could be the better environment for the child and towards a greater expectation that a mother should raise her child herself — even very young mothers and mothers struggling in poverty and with addictions — there were very few babies available to adopt. “It wasn’t because we didn’t care. It’s because there were so many factors stacked against us it just made it insurmountable,” said Mr. Pickett.

“One thing that we will always do is offer free counsel-ing to pregnant women and mental health counseling,” said Mr. Pickett. “We also provide support to any families who had adopted their children through Catholic Charities, whether that was the birth mom or the adoptive family.”

The challenge for Catholic Charities now, Mr. Pickett said, is to find ways to help break the cycle of poverty for mothers and their children. “The reality is we have to find ways to support the needs in the current age with what’s going on out there,” Mr. Pickett said, adding that Catholic Charities has always found ways to do that. “If mothers are choosing to keep their baby, then let’s support those mothers.”

Mr. Pickett said that during his entire tenure he always felt and is grateful for the strong support of the staff, vol-unteers and benefactors of Catholic Charities and also the wonderful collaboration with the many private and public organizations serving the needs of the community’s most vulnerable citizens.

Just wonderful collaboration in this city. That was really one of the things that made me feel encouraged throughout my tenure at Catholic Charities. Even when I was feeling like we were making slow progress I could see we were making progress. There were people out there to encourage us and in turn received encouragement from us,” said Mr. Pickett.

As Mr. Pickett prepares to pedal off into retirement, his heart is full of awe and gratitude in how wonderful God’s timing has been for Catholic Charities and for him. “I thank all the volunteers and financial supporters that have always been positive and encouraging to Catholic Charities. I thank all the staff … I felt like I learned and benefited from knowing every single one of the staff I’ve worked with. I’m thankful that God gave me the gifts that he gave me to allow me to be here. I thank Bishop Foys for hiring me and giving me the opportunity,” said Mr. Pickett. “It was perfect for me to be here during all the struggles and challenges and changes that we went through and it’s a perfect time now with a new bishop (Bishop John Iffert) and a new executive director (Chris Goddard) — it’s God’s timing. I look back and say this was remarkable … I’ve been blessed.”

When Jesus spoke with his disciples at their last supper together, he talked to them like an elderly parent might talk to adult children about their taking over the family business or carrying on the family legacy. The aging parent assures the children that they will do fine; in fact, they say, that they will do as good as they did and even better. What Jesus says is, “You will do the works that I do, and will do greater ones than these.”

Imagine that, Jesus telling his Apostles that they will do even greater works than he did. We are Jesus’ disciples in the world today. His promises in these verses should encourage, comfort and even challenge us.

Let’s make a list of the works Jesus did during his time here, on earth:
- He turned water into wine.
- He gave sight to the man who was born blind.
- He fed 5,000 people with five loaves and two fish.
- The healing of the sick, and their diseases left them and the evil spirits went out.
- He raised Lazarus from the dead.
- He gave sight to the man who was born blind.
- Jesus’ Apostles, of course, knew Jesus and they witnessed him performing miracles. Some of them, inspired by what they saw before their very eyes, did some astonishing things themselves while Jesus was with them. But now, Jesus says that they would continue to do those things after he is gone and that they would do even greater things.

After Jesus ascended into heaven, sacred Scripture tells us that the apostles performed some spectacular miracles, like St. Peter’s shadow falling on the sick and healing them and his raising a woman named Tabitha from the dead.

And then there’s St. Paul. Scripture tells us, “God was performing extraordinary miracles by the hands of (St.) Paul, so that people were taking Paul’s handkerchiefs to the sick, and their diseases left them and the evil spirits went out.”

These are examples of God performing miracles—doing the works that Jesus did and doing greater ones through the disciples of the early Church.

Keep in mind that Jesus did a lot of things that were not miraculous but still furthered the Kingdom of God. There’s a place in John’s Gospel where Jesus sums up his life when he prays, “(Father,) I glorified You on the earth, having accomplished the work which You have given Me to do.”

When Jesus talked to the apostles about doing the works he had done and greater, maybe he wasn’t talking about miracles at all. Maybe he was saying something else about us and our lives — would give glory to the Father simply by being obedient to him in all things, by revealing the Father’s love and mercy to people who might not know it otherwise, and by inspiring and challenging others to do the same.

It’s possible that the greater works Jesus talked about at the Last Supper might not have anything to do with spectacular miracles but are simply about the power of the Gospel to transform lives.

Through Peter’s preaching on the day of Pentecost, 3,000 people were added to their number of those who believed in Jesus, probably more than Jesus saw converted during his entire three-year ministry.

The Book of Acts tells how the message kept spreading, first around Jerusalem, and eventually to the Gentiles around the Roman Empire. Scripture tells us that Jesus said there is more rejoicing in heaven over one repentant sinner than over 99 righteous persons who do not need to repent. Some people might say there is no greater work possible than the conversion of a soul. I caution you not to get downhearted by your inability to feed 5,000 people with five loaves and two fish. Just do your best to be obedient to your heavenly Father in all things, reveal his love and mercy to people who might not know it otherwise, and inspire and challenge others to do the same.

In doing these things together we will glorify our Heavenly Father:

Relationships (Luke 15:11-32)

When the son addresses his parent as “father” there is an immediate sense of a loving relationship. But there is also an apparent abruptness in the request as he considers a change of relationship from son to hired hand. At its heart this consideration is a change from father/son to hired hand/employer relationship. Clearly the young man knows how drastic this choice is. It is made only in the most horrendous of circumstances and there is sadness in the tone.

When he arrives at his former home, he finds a father who has apparently been looking for this son since the moment he left. The father threw open the doors and arms to him and threw him into the arms of his brother. The servant who informed the older of this returned brother also used familial language, telling him that his brother has returned and that his father has welcomed him with a feast.

The older son’s refusal to enter the house or join the feast is a clear statement of his rejection of familial connection. The father pleads with him to join the family feast.

His language reveals his disconnection. He never refers to the younger son as “my brother” but as “that son of yours.” He never says “father” when speaking with his parent. He has been dethroned out of servitude. He may have labored with an expectation of a reward for his dutiful obedience. With the son’s return, the older son contemplates a change of relationship from son to hired hand, the older son has always considered himself a dutiful and obedient hired hand rather than a loving son.

Both sons may have labored well and hard on the farm but the motive, reflected in their language, is different. One son acts as a son, the other as a hired hand. We, too, serve and speak in prayer and service with some sense of connection to our Father. But what kind of connection? Is my service dutiful or a loving response to love? When I examine my conscience is it primarily measuring duty and obedience or does it consider how I have been open to the love of a father/mother God? How often is prayer a simple abiding in love, basking in the love of my mother/father God?

Somewhere in the back of my awareness is there a little expectation of reward? Can I allow myself to be simply held by God in a loving embrace and bask in unmerited grace, with nothing but gratitude for the feast that God prepares for me?

On Grof v DeJoy: Do we still want our Sabbath rest?

Both the extent and the limitations of the Supreme Court’s power are visible in a pending case raising the question of how far employers must go to accommodate employees’ religion. Underlying this dispute — yet obviously unresolvable by the Supreme Court — is the larger reality of the Sabbath’s de facto secularization in today’s America.

The case now before the court — Grof v. DeJoy — concerns a mail carrier who lost his job for refusing to deliver mail on Sunday, his day of Christian rest. The justices heard oral arguments last month and will announce their decision before the court’s current term ends in late June or early July.

Immediately at issue here is “Title VII of the Civil Rights Act barring employment discrimination on the basis of religion (as well as race, color, sex or national origin).” When amending the law in 1972, Congress said an employer should make provisions for an employee’s religious practice unless that would involve “undue hardship” for the business. The question for the court now is what that means in practice.

Whatever the justices eventually decide, this question is all they can decide. The larger issue of Sabbath observance will remain untouched. And since Sunday closing of religious practice unless that would involve “undue hardship” for the business. The question for the court now is what that means in practice.

Meanwhile, of course, it will remain up to individual religious believers to determine for themselves whether and how they choose to observe their religious tradition’s weekly holy day (Sunday for Christians, Saturday for Jews, Friday for Muslims). Moreover — and this certainly holds true Catholics — it’s fair to say that we all need to examine our consciences on this matter of sabbath observance.

Let’s be honest about it. Is Sunday the day we typically devote to buying groceries, browsing for bargains at the mall, and/or long hours devoted to watching back-to-back sporting events on TV? Do we sometimes skip Mass because spending an hour in church would get in the way of these activities or others that we find more pressing or just more entertaining?

“The Sunday R euthrist is the foundation and cornerstone of all Christian practice,” says the Catechism of the Catholic Church (ccc 2181). But it also says quite a bit else: “The institution of the Lord’s Day helps everyone enjoy their personal time, to engage in the daily care of their family, cultural, social, and religious lives” (ccc 2184). And again: “Traditional activities (sport, restaurants, etc.) and social necessities (public services, etc.) require some people to work on Sundays, but everyone should still take care to set aside sufficient time for leisure” (ccc 2187).

I wouldn’t presume to say who’s in the right in the case before the Supreme Court. On behalf of the United States Postal Service, I should point out that the present conflict grew out of the financially hard-pressed Postal Service’s contract with Amazon to deliver the giant retailer’s packages on Sunday. And there’s no question the USPS needs all the income it can get.

As for mail carrier Grof, an Evangelical Christian, there’s much to admire in the fact that he was prepared to fight the system because of his conviction that his faith forbids him to work on Sunday. To that extent, he’s a good example for us all — one that, no matter what the court says, we all can take heart.

Receiving the stranger in our midst

Karen Kuhman
Messenger Correspondent

The Congregation of Divine Providence (CDP) provides newcomers to the United States with a unique opportunity that can help them integrate into the life in their new country: “I was a stranger and you made me welcome.” (Matt 25:30)

In 2010, having assessed the needs of the local immigrant population, the CDP community took up a ministry that offers newcomers the tools necessary to become part of the fabric of their new country: education, resources and advocacy.

The Sisters know they are up to the task — for over 250 years, the Congregation has offered its assistance to people in countries around the globe. Over the past 13 years, the Sisters have invited adult immigrants who settled in the Northern Kentucky area to discover the opportunities available to them at El Centro de la Divina Providence (The Divine Providence Center).

Since its inception, over 700 have accepted the invitation and registered for classes. They hope to find a path toward a better future through the front doors of El Centro, located at 910 Scott St., in Covington. Divine Providence Sister Barbara Patrick, director for El Centro, said, “We are receiving the stranger in our midst, as we are called to do in the Gospel. We always want to be warm and welcoming to all who come to El Centro for the opportunities offered here. That is especially important, as many immigrants have not been treated kindly by some in their new country.”

Sister Barbara said, “The mission of El Centro is to teach students to speak, read and write English. And even though the name is Spanish, we accept students from any country who speak any language.”

In addition, El Centro provides the immigrant community with a gathering space for meetings and activities that foster personal and spiritual growth.

Students live in communities across Northern Kentucky; some come from Cincinnati. All who come to El Centro find a traditional school setting; the atmosphere is very professional, and the day’s activities are well-planned. Opportunities range from learning to read, write and speak English to acquiring basic math skills and understanding currency in the United States. These skills help smooth the path for immigrants as they learn to navigate life in their new country.

Sister Barbara said, “El Centro’s mission of teaching English to immigrants is accomplished through the efforts of many volunteers. They are an essential component of our ministry.”

The students come from many countries. Volunteers use El Centro’s learning system to teach English to Spanish-speaking students who have immigrated from countries such as Guatemala and Creole/French-speaking students from Haiti. The Sisters accept students from any country. El Centro can teach any student from any country who speaks any language to speak English!

Volunteers are delighted to learn that they do NOT have to speak their students’ native language to become a tutor. Anyone who can speak, understand and write English can become a tutor; no other language is necessary.

The 12-level program El Centro provides is user-friendly for students and tutors alike. The program moves through various levels of learning as students gain proficiency. Each student buys an English-only textbook and workbook that comes with a CD. That is their only cost. The textbook and workbook are supplemented with learning on El Centro’s computers.

Learning at El Centro complements students’ and volunteer tutors’ schedules. Sister Barbara records every student’s progress on a spreadsheet and keeps it on file indefinitely. Students may sometimes have to miss classes. The spreadsheets make it easy for students to track their progress and resume where they left off — regardless of the time between sessions.

The volunteers usually work one-to-one with students. Tutors have no preparation to do at home and no papers to correct. Tutors select the day and the time that works for them.

El Centro sessions are available to students and tutors Monday through Thursday mornings from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m.; Monday through Thursday afternoons from 1 to 3 p.m. and Monday and Thursday evenings from 6 to 8 p.m.. Students are not tied to any particular schedule. They can come to any of the sessions or makeup sessions they missed without worrying that an absence might be held against them, as it often does in other programs. Tutors are happy to discover that their schedules are flexible, as well.

Like all who pursue learning a new language, El Centro students express various reasons for acquiring a second language: One hopes to get a better job; another wants to communicate better with her boss; another wants to understand better the direction she receives at work. All are eager to learn the language of their new country and to move forward in their new lives in the United States.

Sister Barbara would like to aid more newcomers, but for that, she needs the help of additional volunteers willing to lend whatever time they can spare to El Centro. This ministry is one of accompaniment — tutors see for themselves the blessing they can be and the difference they can make in the lives of others. It is a mutual blessing to the tutors as well.

The need for tutors is increasing, and Sister Barbara can use all the helping hands she can get. All interested in learning more about becoming a volunteer tutor can reach Sister Barbara at (859) 431-3600 or elcentro@zoomtown.com.
Second graders at St. Agnes, Ft. Wright, finished a unit on informational writing piece about them. Students shared their writing biographies. Each student chose a person to research and wrote an informational writing piece with the class and presented a ‘bottle buddy’ of their famous person.

do God’s will. I ask the Holy Spirit to grace me with the truth I need to live as Christ commands, today. I pray throughout the day that the Holy Spirit would take me through the confusion and the madness that can invade even the simplest interactions. I pray the Holy Spirit would give me the wisdom I need to lead others into all truth.

The Holy Spirit, in speaking the language of truth to us, has sent us disciples on a mission of truth to the world around us. We respond to the confusing flames and noxious fumes of the moronic inferno with the fire of the Holy Spirit. Let us be confident that Jesus Christ is still standing in our midst, that the fire of truth still burns, and that His words to us remain both true and vital:

“Peace be with you.”

Catholic cemeteries are part of the ministry of the Roman Catholic Church. Through the Church, the Body of Christ, we are touched with mercy, love, grace and goodness from the womb to the tomb.

Our bodies are temples of the Holy Spirit, baptized with water, anointed with oil, nourished with the Body and Blood of the Lord, touched with healing and love. Christ himself shared not only our nature, but also our very mortal bodies; therefore, we should always treat human beings and their mortal remains with respect, dignity and honor.

CEMETERIES

In our Catholic cemeteries we carry out sacred religious functions (canon law 1205), create a place of care and prayer and express the beauty of our relationship to God through graced environments that feature beautiful landscapes and mausoleums, spiritual artwork and sacred shrines. Here we can fulfill the Corporal Work of Mercy to bury the dead along with the Spiritual Works of Mercy to console the sorrowing and pray for the living and the dead.

Your Catholic cemeteries:

• Attest to the unity of the living and the dead — a sign of the “Communion of Saints” in our midst.
• Express in words, deeds and objects our belief in the sacredness of human persons, living and dead — whether male or female, rich or poor, powerful or ordinary.
• Provide a focus for the Christian community for prayerful remembrance of the dead.
• Speak of life beyond life, life after death.

In grief we are moved to tears of love

Father Daniel Schomaker
Contributor

As a priest, I have the privilege of encountering people at the most significant and vulnerable moments of their lives — the birth and baptism of a child, engagement and marriage, confession and, of course, the final moments of life on earth and the commendation of the faithful depart- ed to the Lord.

Often times, at the passing of a loved one, I am confront- ed with the tears of mourners. These tears are almost always followed by an apology: “I’m sorry, Father.” To which I say: “For what?”

One of the most “humanizing” passages from the Sacred Scriptures about Jesus comes from the Gospel of St. John. Jesus has learned of the illness of his good friend Lazarus, he travels to Bethany and upon arriving is con- fronted with the reality of death and grief. And we hear those wonderful words: “And Jesus wept.” (John 11:35)

As a Sacramental Theologian, I find tears fascinating — sacraments at their most basic level are the tangible expressions of intangible realities. When confronted with loss, tears express grief — grief is a consequence of love; so then tears are an expression of love. And we know from the Bible that “God is love,” therefore tears are an expres- sion of God and his presence amongst us.

One should never be ashamed or sorry for tears shed in times of sorrow. Tears are the tangible expression of God with us. I like to think that as the tears run down one’s face, it is the hand of the Almighty caressing our cheeks while whispering, “It’s ok.” Because it is “ok.”

The Lord Jesus reminds us: “Everything that the Father gives me will come to me, and I will not reject any- one who comes to me, because I came down from heaven not to do my own will but the will of the one who sent me. And this is the will of the one who sent me, that I should not lose anything of what he gave me, but that I should raise it [for] the last day.” (John 6:37-39)

We belong to God! Let that sink in for a moment — stop reading — you belong to God! YOU BELONG TO GOD! In the midst of hardship and pain and anxiety and hurt and grief, and <<fill in the blank>> of life, the God who made you out of nothing and who loved you into being and sus- tains you in being by his love, chooses you as his own! He longs for you! He desires you!

This longing that God has for YOU is what makes every- thing “ok.” And, I know, it’s easy to write and say but not always easy to grasp when one’s heart is troubled and bro- ken. Death is hard.

One of the reasons that it is hard, is because death is contrary to our nature. We were made for paradise and to rejoice in the divine presence for eternity. But, the evil that is death entered into reality because of sin. Instead of basking in the Light of the World, we chose to be that which we were (and are), not God. God determines what is good and right and just and true.

Death is something we must now all deal with — it’s a guarantee, just like taxes. St. Benedict reminded his monks to “keep death always before your eyes.” So, too, should we — not out of fear but out of love. Fear keeps us from being who we have been called to be and can turn us towards sin. A life lived in love turns the heart, the mind and the soul to the One who is Love.

We are all called to holiness of life — to seek virtue and avoid vice. A virtuous life lived should not be afraid of death but should welcome it, for although the path has yet to be trodden, we know where it leads — to Jesus! To heav- en! Where “He will wipe every tear from [our] eyes, and there shall be no more death or mourning, wailing or pain, [for] the old order has passed away” (Rev 21:4)

Saints accompany, intercede for Christians in prayer

Junio Arocho Esteves
Catholic News Service

Christians are never alone in prayer but instead are accompanied by myriad saints who protect them and seek God’s intercession, Pope Francis said.

Whenever men or women open their hearts to God, they will always be in the “company of anonymous and recog- nized saints who pray with us and who intercede for us as older brothers and sisters who have preceded us on this same human adventure,” the pope said April 7, 2021, during his weekly general audience.

In his series of talks on prayer, the pope reflected on the connection between prayer and the communion of saints who are “not far from us” and are a reminder of Jesus Christ because they have also “walked the path of life” as Christians.

“In the Church, there is no mourning that remains soli- tary no tear that is shed in oblivion, because everything embraces and participates in a common grace,” he said.

The tradition of having graveyards around churches is a sign of that sharing, he said. It is “as if to say that every Eucharist is attended in some way by those who have preced- ed us. There are our parents and grandparents, our godfa- thers and godmothers, our catechists and other educators,” who have not only transmitted faith but also “the way of prayer.”

The saints, he explained, are “witnesses that we do not adore — that is understood, we do not worship these saints — but whom we venerate and who in thousands of different ways bring us to Jesus Christ, the only Lord and mediator between God and human beings.”

Departing from his prepared remarks, the pope said the lives of saints also serve as a reminder that “even in our lives, though weak and marked by sin, holiness can blossom.”

“In the Gospel, we read that the first ‘canonized’ saint was a thief and he was ‘canonized’ not by a pope, but by Jesus himself,” he said. “Holiness is a path of life, of encounter with Jesus, whether long or short, or in an instant, but always a witness” of God’s love.

The pope also highlighted the need for Christians to pray for another, which is “the first way of loving.”

In times of tension, he said, “one way to dissolve the con- flict, to soften it, is to pray for the person with whom I am in conflict. Something changes with prayer; the first thing that changes is my heart, my attitude. The Lord changes it to make an encounter possible, a new encounter, and prevents the conflict from becoming a war without end.”

Pope Francis said that “thing people must do in times of anguish is to ask ‘our brothers and sisters, the saints above all, to pray for us’ because they will ‘give us hand to obtain from God the graces we need most.’”

An attorney’s perspective: What to do when a loved one passes away

Chadwick Seiter
Messenger Contributor

Losing a loved one is an inevitable part of the human experience; yet, when confronted with the reality of death, many are unprepared to navigate the ensuing complexities. Today, I delve into the practical and legal aspects of managing the aftermath of a loved one’s passing and shed light on essential steps to take during this trying time.

First, notifying the appropriate authorities and obtaining a legal pronouncement of death are crucial. This step facilitates the generation of a death certificate—a document often required for legal and administrative matters. Especially for at-home deaths, promptly contacting the relevant healthcare professionals or emergency services will ensure the smooth transportation of the deceased to the funeral home.

After completing these immediate procedures, locating the deceased’s personal and financial information—such as a will, social security information and bank statements—becomes essential. These important documents will be foundational to any possible future legal proceedings.

Practically speaking, funeral and burial arrangements must also be addressed. Review any prearranged funeral plans or wishes the deceased expressed. While making funeral arrangements can be emotionally challenging, having open and honest discussions can alleviate the burden on loved ones and ensure that the deceased’s final wishes are honored.

The primary legal consideration when a loved one passes is the probate process. Probate is a court process during which a judge reviews and accepts (or declines) a will, swears in an Executor or Administrator, and assets and debts are identified and distributed in accordance with the terms of the will. If the will is absent, the estate will be distributed according to intestacy laws.

Engaging a probate attorney can help one navigate the court process and ensure compliance with legal requirements. However, if the deceased had assets with valid beneficiary designations, which is often the case for insurance policies and retirement accounts, those assets avoid probate administration entirely.

Consider seeking guidance on assessing the estate’s potential tax implications. While the federal estate tax typically only applies to estates of over $12.92 million, the Kentucky Inheritance Tax may need to be paid, if nieces, nephews, cousins, and friends (among others) are beneficiaries to an estate. Discussing such matters with a probate attorney or tax professional is highly advisable.

Finally, remember that grieving is a deeply personal and unique process. Allow yourself and your family the time and space to mourn.

The practical and legal aspects of addressing a loved one’s passing can be overwhelming. By taking a systematic approach and seeking professional guidance where necessary, one can more easily tread this challenging terrain.

While the grieving process cannot be simplified or rushed, addressing practical concerns can provide a sense of closure and facilitate a smoother healing process.

Project Rachel—there is hope after abortion

Project Rachel, a ministry of the Catholic Church in the United States, offers help and healing to those who have been involved in abortion. The Project Rachel website, available at projectrachel.com, provides resources and advice for those struggling after abortion and for those wanting to help a friend who is struggling. The website also includes the stories of those who have been helped through Project Rachel.

From the website, here is Brenda’s story.

In June of 1987, I saw the last thing I ever expected to see—a positive result on a home pregnancy test. I had just turned 18 years old. I had been raped four weeks before by an acquaintance at my prom. I hadn’t told anyone what had happened to me, and I told no one that I was pregnant. I simply dealt with it on my own. I stood up, went to the phone book, opened it up, and called the first abortion clinic I could find. I didn’t stop to think, to pray, to question. I didn’t consider any other option—I didn’t think I had another choice.

I went to the clinic a couple of weeks later for an abortion. I remember the feeling of complete isolation and utter terror as I sat in that waiting room. I was surrounded by other people, but completely alone.

I promptly put away all of my feelings and thoughts about what had happened to me—the rape, the abortion, the baby. I graduated from college, worked through my twenties, got married, got pregnant with my first child. My pregnancy was wonderful but also filled with fear. I didn’t want to have a baby, I had killed my baby—God would take this baby away from me as a punishment.

I went on to have three children. I rocked them to sleep, kissed away boo-boos, pushed them on the swings and caught them in that waiting room. I was surrounded by other people, but completely alone.

I thought that loss I felt was that first child. I didn’t realize that loss I felt was God. There was a hole in my soul that could only be filled with God, and I felt separated from Him.

During my thirties, as I was outwardly being a wife and mother, I was also descending further and further into depression, anxiety and ultimately active alcoholism.

I struggled with alcoholism for almost a decade, looking for help from medical treatment and fellowship with other alcoholics. Nothing was helping me put down the bottle and take control of my life. I sought mental health treatment for the trauma I experienced around the rape and the abortion, but I was still suffering, and I was still drinking. It constantly weighed on my mind that I was in a state of mortal sin — I had killed my baby. I needed to go to confession, and so I finally did. Even though my priest granted me absolution, somehow I didn’t feel forgiven. I continued to drink.

I had heard about Project Rachel somewhere, I don’t remember where exactly. Should I call them? I had already been to confession for my sin, how can this be something different? I just hoped and somehow felt that it was.

I finally summoned the courage to contact Project Rachel. I got a call back from a beautiful woman, who simply and lovingly talked to me as if I were worthy of her time, and her help. What a gift!

I attended a one-day retreat in May of 2009. I was a mess, sick with fear and anger. I even took a few drinks that day to get myself to the retreat. Sitting in a room with other women who were in as much pain as I was, hearing their stories, sharing my own out loud, was an indescribable relief. I didn’t know I could say out loud, that I had had an abortion and have those words be met with acceptance and understanding.

I thought I was sitting in a room with other women. I really was sitting in a room with God, loving me and welcoming me home. His presence was manifest in the physical presence of the others in the room. It was a full circle from the day in 1987 when I sat in an abortion clinic, completely alone.

I didn’t know it then, but that day at the Project Rachel retreat was the beginning of my journey back from the depths of alcoholism. Slowly, with work on my part, and help from others who suffer from the same spiritual malady, I found myself on the path to sobriety and in a relationship with God. I have found peace and forgiveness and mental wellness.

I know that my child is with God. I know that my living children and my husband and I are also with God. We are all together today, in God’s hands. I hold that child and my children in my heart every day, and I am grateful for Project Rachel for bringing me to this place of peace.

Human composting, alkaline hydrolysis not acceptable for burial

Gina Christian
GNS News

Two new alternatives to burial and cremation fail to comply with the Catholic Church’s teaching on respect for the bodies of the dead, the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops’ Committee on Doctrine said.

In a March 23 statement, the committee said it had evaluated human composting and alkaline hydrolysis, and concluded that both “fail to satisfy the Church’s requirements for proper respect for the bodies of the dead.” The methods, which rapidly accelerate decomposition, have gained support in recent years as “eco-friendly” forms of treating human remains.

In human composting, the body of the departed is placed in a metal bin with plant material to enable microbes and bacteria, along with heat and oxygen, to break down bones and tissues. The resulting mixture is then offered for lawn or garden use.

Alkaline hydrolysis dissolves the body in some 100 gallons of water and alkali under high temperature and pressure. Within hours, the body is dissolved, except for some bone material which is then dried and pulverized.

Unlike flame-based cremation, which uses intense heat to reduce human remains to ashes, human composting and alkaline hydrolysis do not “show adequate respect for the human body, nor express hope in the resurrection,” said the bishops in the seven-page document that accompanied their statement.

Burial is “the most fitting way to express faith and hope in the resurrection of the body,” wrote the bishops, quoting the 2016 instruction “Ad resurgendum cum Christo: regarding the burial of the deceased and the conservation of the ashes in the case of cremation” by the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith. The congregation is now the Dicastery for the Doctrine of the Faith.

According to the 2016 instruction, flame-based cremation is permissible, so long as the ashes are gathered and laid to rest in a sacred place, rather than being stored at home, distributed among loved ones, encased in jewelry or scattered broadly.

In contrast, both human composting and alkaline hydrolysis leave nothing that could be properly interred, said the U.S. bishops.

Following alkaline hydrolysis, “there are about 100 gallons of liquid into which the greater part of the body has been dissolved, and this liquid has been treated as wastewater,” they wrote. “At the end of the human composting process (there is) nothing distinguishably left of the body to be laid to rest in a sacred place.”

Katrina Spade, founder and CEO of Seattle-based Recompose, the self-described “first human composting company in the world,” said in a 2021 video interview that “you’re not human anymore at the end of this process.”

Alkaline hydrolysis is legal in several states as well, with the Cremation Association of North America having expanded its definition of cremation in 2010 to include the method, which also is known as “water” or “chemical cremation.”

NOTES: The full March 23 statement of the U.S. Catholic Conference of Bishops’ Committee on Doctrine regarding human composting and alkaline hydrolysis can be found at https://www.usccb.org/resources/On Proper Disposition 2023-03-20.pdf.
Northern Kentucky Nurses Honor Guard honor the memory of deceased nurses

Maura Baker
Staff Writer

On Facebook, Jody Schneider, LPN, founder and coordinator of the Northern Kentucky chapter of the Nurses Honor Guard, once saw an image of a tribute to a deceased nurse by a South Carolina chapter of the organization—dressed in their capes and caps. “I feel very strongly about taking care of people with grief and in hospice,” said Ms. Schneider, who would then reach out to the coordinator of the South Carolina chapter. From there, she was referred to the national coordinator, and in September of 2021, established the Northern Kentucky Chapter. Ms. Schneider then reached out across Facebook and to every nurse she knew in the area—today, the guard has 35 members, including both working and retired nurses of nearly every type and discipline. “We all feel very strongly that it’s an honor to be able to go into the funeral home or the memorial service and perform the ‘Nightingale Tribute’—a tribute done by the Nurses Honor Guard to honor deceased nurses—and that gives the family a start to recognize that nursing was a part of their life,” said Ms. Schneider.

The guard dresses in traditional uniforms, “cape and everything,” she said. “We’ve had people say that they remember when mom wore her cap—and it brings back happy memories for them of mom being a nurse. We feel very honored to be able to offer that kind of service.”

The Nurses Honor Guard, outside of the Northern Kentucky chapter, exists in every state, including Hawaii and Alaska. Currently, the national coordinator is working to organize a national meeting for the guard, set to happen next spring at the St. Elizabeth Training and Education Center (SETEC) in Erlanger.

Those interested in the honor guard may contact Jody Schneider, coordinator, by phone at (859) 802-1161, or by e-mail at nkynursehonorguard@gmail.com.

Pre-planning in the Diocese of Covington

Pre-planning for burial occurs before you or a loved one has passed away and oftentimes is necessary so that the deceased can be buried in the most suitable area. Some people like to pick a spot near family or friends, while others may prefer a niche or an urn or placement in a mausoleum as opposed to a standard casket burial. All of these decisions come as a part of pre-planning.

In the Diocese of Covington, pre-planning begins by reaching out to the specific cemetery yourself or a loved one is interested in, or by calling the Curia Buildings & Properties office. From there, arrangements can be made based on individual needs and availability within the cemetery of choice.

Eternal rest grant unto them, O Lord, and let perpetual light shine upon them. May their souls and the souls of all the faithful departed, through the mercy of God, rest in peace. Amen.

PRINCIPAL
St. Henry Catholic School (www.sthenryschool.net) located in Elsmere, KY, is seeking a new principal to begin July 1, 2023. Since 1893, St. Henry Parish has been educating children in the Catholic faith and academics through its largest ministry, St. Henry Catholic School.

With Jesus Christ as our role model, St. Henry is committed to providing students with a strong Catholic education and to forming independent thinkers who follow His examples. Within the St. Henry Catholic School community, each child is valued as a unique individual and is given every opportunity to meet his or her full potential.

As a 2016 National Blue Ribbon School of Excellence, our students learn to become deeply rooted in the Catholic faith by being connected to God and others, gaining confidence in their academic, social, and physical abilities, and contributing to the community through service and leadership.

The successful candidate will be a practicing Catholic in good standing with the Church and supportive of her teaching and mission, who holds or is eligible for Kentucky principal certification. The principal will oversee a staff of 40 and a student body of 350 in grades pre-K through 8.

To apply, or to nominate a candidate, email or fax a cover letter, resume with the contact email address of at least five professional references, and compensation history to Stephen Koplyay, SPHR at skoplyay@covdio.org, 859/392-1589, or send by mail to 1125 Madison Avenue, Covington, KY 41011-3115.

As summer approaches, Laura Hatfield, director, School Lunch Program of the Diocese of Covington, wants to ensure that all children in the community have access to nutritious meals, even when school is out.

“We are excited to let parents and caregivers know about the USDA Summer meals for Kids Site Finder,” Mrs. Hatfield said.

The Kids Site Finder website, online at www.fns.usda.gov/meals4kids, helps find nearby sites where children can receive free meals during the summer months. These sites are available in Boone County, Campbell County, Harrison County, Kenton County and Mason County, and will operate from June 2 to July 28.

To find a nearby site, simply visit www.fns.usda.gov/meals4kids and enter your zip code or address. The site will provide a list of locations and mealtimes, as well as any eligibility requirements. Help is also available by phone; call 1-866-3-HUNGRY (1-866-348-6479) to speak to a representative who can help locate a site.

“It is important to note that these meals are available to all children under the age of 18, regardless of income or eligibility for reduced-price school meals,” said Mrs. Hatfield. “I encourage you to take advantage of this program to ensure your child receives nutritious meals throughout the summer. Prayers that you and your family have a safe and enjoyable summer.”

Nebraska pass bill protecting children from abortion, gender-altering procedures

LINCOLN, Neb. — Nebraska lawmakers passed a measure May 19 prohibiting abortion at 12 weeks gestation and banning gender-altering surgeries for minors. The Let Them Grow Act, LR241, overcame a continued filibuster effort by abortion rights and transgender ideology advocates and was sent to the desk of Nebraska Gov. Jim Pillen, who was expected to sign it. The act marks the first restriction on abortion in Nebraska since the U.S. Supreme Court overturned Roe v. Wade last summer and the most significant step to protect the unborn in the state since 2019 when lawmakers outlawed abortion at 20 weeks. It also represents the first state effort to govern gender-altering procedures for children.

900 civilians died in Nigeria’s Imo state in just 29 months

ABUJA, Nigeria — A leading Nigerian human rights organization has published a report with sobering statistics on summary executions, massing, forced disappearances and illegal detentions in Imo state of southeast Nigeria. Presenting the report during a press conference May 21, Bimbo Oumoshoake, a Catholic human rights activist and chairman of the Intersociety organization, said that in just 26 months, from January 2021-May 2023, “security forces and allied milita-tias killed 900 unarmed citizens, wounded 10,000, arrested 3,500, extorted 1,480 and disappeared 78.” In addition, the report said that 1,480 civilian houses were burned down, displacing 30,000 owners and their family members and forcing 500,000 citizens to flee. According to the report, non-state actors, such as Fulani jihadists and other militias were responsible for most of the deaths, as well as for 900 kidnappings that occurred during the same time period. Most of those killed in Imo state and elsewhere in southeast Nigeria might have been targeted because of their Christian faith, authors of the report stressed.

Mexican priest murdered, archbishop attacked

MEXICO CITY — A parish priest was shot dead as he drove on a rural Mexican highway May 22, marking yet another attack in what has become the most murderous country for Catholic clergy. Augustinian Father Jacinto García Villahín was killed at around 7 p.m. in the municipality of Huanusco in Michoacán state to the west of Mexico City. Father García was found dead on the Capacho-Cuitzeo highway with gunshot wounds. The road leads to the Capacho commu-ity, to which he belonged. The Archdiocese of Morelia acknowledged Father García’s death, but provided little information and did not respond to a request for comment. The Catholic Multimedia Center, which tracks attacks on clergy, reported Father García had assumed responsibility for the Our Lady of Atonement parish in Huanusco on April 3. The murder of Father García followed a May 3 attack on Archbishop Faustino Armendáriz Jiménez of Durango, who said an elderly man swung a knife at him in the sacristy of the Durango cathedral.

Leaders warn of ‘extremely detrimental’ effects bill legalizing assisted suicide

EDINBURGH, Scotland — The Scottish Catholic bishops have signed a public statement of “protest against a bill to legalise assisted suicide in their country. They joined the Church of Scotland — part of the worldwide Anglican Communion — and the Scottish Association of Mosques to object to a change in the law because it would ‘put pressure on vulnerable individuals’ to take their own lives. Bishop John Keenan of Paisley, vice president of the Scottish Bishops’ Conference, signed the statement with the Rev. Iain Greenshields, the moderator of the Church of Scotland and Imam Shaykh Hamza Khandwalla, of the Dundee Central Mosque, which tracks attacks on clergy. Bishop Keenan had assumed responsibility for the Our Lady of Atonement parish in Huanusco on April 3. The statement “regards the displacement of hundreds of thousands since April 15, “regarding the partial agreement between the two sides engaged in the power struggle, but the fighting has continued. The Catholic Multimedia Center, which tracks attacks on clergy, reported Father García had assumed responsibility for the Our Lady of Atonement parish in Huanusco on April 3. AL topic draws record number of participants to media ethics conference

KRAKOW, Poland — For 17 years, the media ethics conference of the Pontifical University of John Paul II in Krakow, Poland, has gathered media researchers from all over the country. This year it attracted a record number of academics. The reason? The main topic was the ethics of ‘using AI in the media space.’ The theme is gaining momentum,” Father Michal Drozd, dean of the university’s social sciences department, told OSV News. “So far we’re in the stage of having fun with ChatGPT, we’re treating it as an adventure. But we see more and more that this is an issue of human ethical security, and we start our reflections from this point at the conference,” he said.

Pope appeals for cease-fire, international assistance in Sudan

VATICAN CITY — Pope Francis has appealed for a cease-fire in Sudan and for the international community to help promote dialogue.

“It is sad, but a month after the outbreak of violence in Sudan, the situation continues to be serious,” he said after reciting the midday “Regina Coeli” prayer with about 25,000 people gathered in St. Peter’s Square May 21. The pope has been expressing his concern about Sudan after the midday prayer for weeks, fighting between forces loyal to two different generals has led to the deaths of hundreds of civilians and the displacement of hundreds of thousands more since April 15.

Several humanitarian cease-fire agreements have been reached by the two sides engaged in the power struggle, but the fighting has continued. Pope Francis said May 21, “While encouraging the partial agreements reached so far, I renew my heartfelt appeal for the laying down of weapons, and I ask the international community to spare no effort to make dialogue prevail and to alleviate the suffering of the people.”
