Brother bishops gather in Baltimore for fall assembly, discussion and prayer

The United States Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) came together Nov. 13-16 for its Fall Plenary Assembly in Baltimore, Maryland. The assembly began with a focus on prayer, opening with a Mass for Peace at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Assumption of the Blessed Mary On the following day, public sessions for the assembly began with the bishops sending prayers and a message to the Holy Father, Pope Francis, as well as an address by Cardinal Christophe Pierre, papal nuncio to the United States. Archbishop Timothy P. Broglio of the Archdiocese for the Military Services, USA addressed the body as USCCB president.

Bishop John Iffert, bishop of the Diocese of Covington, was one of the bishops in attendance at the assembly, whose impression of the meeting and involved discussions were overall “good.”

“There was a good discussion about the Synod on the Synod,” he said, “and we had great reports back from folks who had participated in the Synod.”

Bishop Iffert also said that bishops were given a preview of materials intended to help dioceses and parishes to process the conversations that happened at the Synod in Rome, and to “begin to build on that, and remembering that the whole purpose of the Synod is not to make a particular decision, but the whole purpose of the Synod is for us to practice listening to one another in love, journeying together.”

Another key discussion to the assembly was regarding a new process for USCCB’s pastoral planning. According to Bishop Iffert, there’s going to be “more diocesan engagement in how we feed information upward to the Conference for establishing the Conference’s priorities.”

Re-issuing faithful citizenship was another topic on the assembly’s agenda—a teaching document on the political responsibility of Catholics, which some bishops believe is in need of updating. Other topics include updates on the Eucharistic Revival, a national pastoral plan for Hispanic Ministry, and a vote in support of the bishops’ conference of England and Wales asking the Holy Father to name St. John Henry Newman a Doctor of the Church.

Mental health was also a topic presented at the assembly with Bishop Iffert mentioning a “new initiative on trying to promote mental health awareness.” A presentation was given on the topic, with two USCCB committees working on materials hoping to address growing mental health concerns in the United States. According to Bishop Iffert, the topic of mental health was one that got “the most engagement” of anything discussed during the assembly.

“There was more conversation, more input from the bishops,” he said, with input often engaging the personal experiences of the bishops.

Bishop Iffert commented on the “fraternity and comradery” felt among the bishops at the assembly, stating that the reports of controversies among the bishops were “over-reported.” “When you share this vocation, everyone else is so good and well-intentioned, but nobody understands what you’re doing except someone else who’s doing that—and, to be able to be there, have conversations and share meals…it really does connect you to the sense of the universal Church, and that you’re part of this carrying the ministry forward.”

Over 250 teens and chaperones from the Diocese of Covington attended the National Youth Conference, Nov. 16-18, at Lucas Oil Stadium, Indianapolis. The theme for the Catholic youth conference was, “Fully Alive!” Based on the comments from youth returning from the event, NCYC lived up to its theme.

Bishop John Iffert was one of 17 concelebrating bishops at NCYC’s closing Mass, Nov. 18, which he said “was really something.” The homilist, Bishop Joseph Espaillat, an Auxiliary Bishop of Archbishop of New York, at the age of 46, is the youngest bishop in the United States and the second youngest in the world. “He was just on fire that night. He was a great witness,” said Bishop Iffert. (See related story on page CLOSING#.)

“I was very impressed with our delegation,” said Bishop Iffert about the over 250

teens and chaperones who attended NCYC. “There was a great response from the youth and the young adults who served them and took care of meals for them — they had a great spirit.” Bishop Iffert was also impressed with the adult chaperones, many of whom have been attending NCYC and ministering to the youth of the Diocese for 20 or more years.

Bishop Iffert said that the conference “was what it always is — a great shot in the arm, a joyful experience with young people coming together and meeting people from across the country for them to reconnect and be energized, to come to know the joy of the Church and that Christ loves them.” Bishop Iffert told the teens from the Diocese of Covington that they are “both/and.” “They are the future of the Church and they are part of the Church now.” He encouraged them to take to heart discernment and being forgiven before participating in adoration with so many people helped me feel the true love of Jesus Christ. THRIVE! Youth ministry gathering.

Momentum for Youth Ministry is building in the Diocese of Covington, according to Angie Poat, diocesan Youth Minister. Youth returning from last week’s NCYC (National Catholic Youth Conference) has spawned unprecedented energy, excitement and ideas among the diocese’s youth. The teens who attended NCYC have taken to heart Bishop Iffert’s message that they are “both/and” the future Church and the Church now and are eager to share their “Fully Alive” faith.

Adult leaders — volunteers, catechists, teachers, coaches, campus ministers, youth ministers, chaplains, retreat leaders, and all who desire to serve the young church — are needed to join the youth in their excitement. THRIVE! Is a gathering of youth ministers. Come hungry! Dinner and spiritual nourishment will be provided, including a positive, prayerful and productive night filled with information to help our Diocese THRIVE! RSVP by Dec 2, at covdio.org/youth.

High School Placement Test

The Department of Catholic Schools announces the annual High School Placement Test Saturday, Dec. 9, 9 a.m. to Noon

The High School Placement Test is administered to current 8th grade students who are interested in attending a Catholic high school in the Diocese of Covington. High School Placement Test Scholarships will be awarded to students only from the high school where the student took the test.

The registration process is coordinated through each individual high school. For further information, contact any secondary school listed or the Department of Catholic Schools at (859) 392-1500.

Broadcast Mass time change

Beginning Sunday, Dec. 31, the time of the Sunday broadcast of the TV Mass from the Cathedral Basilica of the Assumption, Covington, will change from 12 p.m. to 10 a.m. Viewers will continue to tune-in to the Mass on The CW on the following channels: antenna 12.2; Spectrum 117 or 25; Cincinati Bell 17 or 517; and DirectTV 25. The Mass is also streamed live with a recording available on the Cathedral’s website covcathedral.com.

40 Hour Devotion

This year, the three-year Eucharistic Revival is in its parish phase. To help unite parishes around the Eucharist, Bishop John Iffert, at the request of the diocesan Worship Committee, has asked parishes to host 40 Hours of continual Eucharistic adoration.

These 40 Hours will be scheduled sometime during the year, from now until July 2024, when the revival culminates with a Eucharistic Congress, July 17–21, 2024, at Lucas Oil Stadium, Indianapolis. Discounted tickets for the Congress are available through the diocesan Office of Worship and Liturgy; an application is online at covdio.org.

The great blessing
I want to tell his story because he is an inspiration. His life message is something I felt compelled to share, just like the light he shines, it must not be hidden.

Paul Mohr and I are both kids at St. Therese School in the 1970s, and life happened in between. He returned to St. Therese in 2005 at the age of 45. Paul had adventures in California and Connecticut, not all virtuous, but he never lost his Catholic faith. In his words, he pursued worldly pleasures and treasures, but found that he had adventures in California and Connecticut, not all virtuous, but he never lost his Catholic faith. He found it a blessing he has no wife or children. He has restless leg syndromes and scoliosis to add to his ailments. He views all this as mere inconveniences, it is for him an extraordinary opportunity God has given him to participate with Christ in prayer and the apostolate of redemptive suffering.

In all this suffering, Paul remains at peace, and always positive to be given this great blessing. He is at peace that God is his Lord and his work in prison ministry, although good and beneficial to the other, was not his call. God had another plan, a better plan, for Paul. Paul prays daily for patience and the ability to continue in embracing his vocation and to see, accept and love himself.

When first diagnosed, he briefly asked why me Lord, but quickly reasserted that to ask why, not me? He recognizes the gifts God gives him; the countless blessings heaped throughout his entire life which he sees as preparing him for his great blessing. This blessing is hard, it doesn't feel good, he is not sitting around smiling all day, but he says the joy comes in knowing he is doing God's will as best he can.

Paul quotes Father Walter Czarnecki, “Prayer doesn't take away the physical pain or mental anguish, but it gives you a certain moral strength that allows you to bear any burden patiently.”

As I speak for all the men at fellowship group, we pray for Paul's strength to continue to be with us, but he has been preparing us that his gradual decline will one day present even to him and his family. Paul has said many times, keep praying, take advantage of the gifts Jesus gave us in the Church, the sacraments in particular. Expected acceptance and the ordinary God she relates us to have.

Lastly, I recall something Paul once said: having the troubled, who have caused every temptation of this world, riches, power, prestige, pleasures, all has been stripped, and for good cause. This blessing has given me humility foremost, and time and desire to prepare for the next life.

Not all of us can say our life circumstances have been stripped, and we have to strive how we (haven't) set a new framework regarding our sexuality, regardless of our state in life to have.

We need to teach more effectively about chastity, which derives from the cardinal virtue of temperance and which enables us to attain an inner unity of body and soul.

We need to accompany our youth as they develop sexually, and not forbid that task to Instagram.

We need to reach out to the single and the divorced, and to those who are confused about their sexuality, rather than leaving them to figure things out via TikTok.

We need to minister to those who have been sexually abused (whether by our own clergy or by others) and work to recognize potential abusers before they become offenders.

Mostly as a society, we need to grow up, stop treating our gift of sexuality like a rambunctious playground and look at it from a holistic, organic and adult — dare I say “trinitarian” perspective. We must demonstrate a little humility before our Maker, that we might stand tall in the fullness of our humanity, living out our dignity as sons and daughters of God — and ensuring that others can do the same.

The tilt of reality, the Kingship of Christ and the Kingdom of God

As we slide toward the end of another liturgical year and the Solemnity of Christ the King, war in the Holy Land is sadly dominating the headlines once again. So are reports of not just threats and attacks against Jews around the world. To borrow from General Douglas MacArthur it’s proof that “theJews” have never died, and they don’t just fade away either. How should Catholics understand and interpret what is going on in our world?

The persecution of Jews is one of humanity’s oldest surviving “lack crimes,” though I hesitate to use that term. Long before Christians were crucified, stoned, beheaded, or thrown to wild beasts, the Jewish people were an object of scorn and discrimination. Oppression and deportation began as early as 605 BC, under the Second Babylonian (or Chaldean) Empire. Less than 200 years before Christ, the Seleucids banned sacrificial rites, sabbaths, feasts, and circumcision and made owning a copy of their sacred writings an offense punishable by death. Things got even worse once Rome destroyed both the Temple and the city of Jerusalem in AD 70. That and was followed by Hadrian’s second-century attempts to outline all Jewish religious practice. Whatever resulted from each of these periods was the uprooting of Jews from the dominant aspect of their culture, the loss of Jewish kingship. Those who consider the implications of this for the Church’s understanding of how the Kingdom of God was intended—God’s intervention in the world—are Ezekiel 34:11-12, 15-17; 1 Corinthians 15:20-26, 28 and Matthew 25:31-46.

The celebration of the Solemnity of Christ the King carries within it a promise and a hope. As the prophet Ezekiel notes, the Lord God . . . will look after and tend his sheep. (Continued on page 20)

Catholics and Jews, the King

One of my favorite Gospel writings is the parable of the talents. There are so many layers to this and multiple ways for this parable to inspire us. Each time I read it, I gain greater insight into my own life. It is a parable that calls for deep introspection. Recently I was in a meeting with my Philadelphia Next Generation Parish that I have the privilege to lead through the pastoral planning process. We were doing an opening Gospel reflection on this parable and the priest was asking each person if they had used their talents in the way God intended? When he got to me, I said no because I knew there were plenty of times I had failed to do so. But, I also said that this is the beauty of the love of God and the Church, I have the opportunity today to start over and do the best I can.

For me, this parable speaks, at least at this point of my life, to two distinct themes. First is our own human potential. That potential is a multi layered understanding of who we are as people operating under the conditions in which we live. It specifies what we must do to be the best. In all the aspects of our humanity and those include my spiritual life, intellectual capacity, my expression of love of my fellow man and my philosophy of life. When I try to be better in each day of those aspects of myself, I move closer to my true human potential. The second theme I see here is the concept of risk and reward. The two men who took their talents and multiplied them took some risk. It is the idea we all have heard that there is no risk, there is no reward. This is not to say we should take unnecessary risk, but we also should not be afraid to stick ourselves out there when needed. This is particularly important when it comes to evangelization. We should be prepared to proclaim the truth of the Gospel whenever we have the chance. When I try to be better in each day of those aspects of myself, I move closer to my true human potential.

As Christians we need to start doing a better job! Everything is a dreadful waste of time if the objective reality he has uncovered, saying, “if objective reality tilts too far in its imperfection, subjective reality no longer has any meaning.” A quick glance at the headlines shows us that this situation is not an uncommon occurrence in our subjective reality. Within our soul we go through our daily routine. We try to cling to our faith, but all that is washing over us, we can experience a hollowness in our lives. It carries within it a promise and a hope. As the prophet Ezekiel notes, the Lord God . . . will look after and tend his sheep. (Continued on page 20)

The readings for The Solemnity of Our Lord Jesus Christ, King of the Universe — Cycle A — are: Ezekiel 34:11-12, 15-17; 1 Corinthians 15:20-26, 28 and Matthew 25:31-46. In the novel, “The Dimensions of a Cave,” the main character, Quentin Jones, has a realization about a smatter of reality he has uncovered, saying, “if objective reality tilts too far in its imperfection, subjective reality no longer has any meaning.” A quick glance at the headlines shows us that this situation is not an uncommon occurrence in our subjective reality. Student exchange program connects Benedictine schools

Villa Madonna Academy, Villa Hills, shared the first few days of November with students from St. Bede Academy in Peru, Illinois. Both schools are among the 24 United States Benedictine High Schools, and the exchange program was created to allow the two schools to stay connected with one another.

The idea for the exchange program went into development before the COVID-19 pandemic, according to Benedictine Sister Eileen O'Connell, a theology teacher at Villa Madonna Academy and head of the academy’s exchange program. “The administrators had gotten together at a conference, and my principal and I were talking, what a great idea it would be if these kids could get to know each other and share and see what other Benedictine schools do,” she said.

Villa Madonna Academy exchanged students once before with a Benedictine school in Alabama prior to COVID, with “great results,” which led Villa Madonna Academy to invite St. Bede to send students this year.

“A hallmark of Benedictine schools is hospitality. All of us from St. Bede Academy experienced this hospitality in so many ways during the recent exchange with Villa Madonna Academy,” said Benedictine Father Ronald Margherio, chaplain at St. Bede Academy.

Students from St. Bede arrived on Wednesday, Nov. 1, and stayed with the Benedictines in their guest house until the following Sunday. Alongside their host students at Villa Madonna, these students shadowed classes, attended a dance Saturday night, and participated in stewardship activities like visiting the Newport Aquarium and Cincinnati Zoo—all following Benedictine hospitality and community.

Tommy Wenning, a senior at Villa Madonna Academy, said, “The exchange program was a great way to meet other students our age from a fellow Benedictine school. I made friends I won’t ever forget in the short time that they were here! I hope they enjoyed their time in our backyard whether it was the Graeters, the zoo or the aquarium! I can’t wait to see what they show us in the spring, too!” He said, noting how the same students that hosted those from St. Bede will be heading to Illinois in the spring of next year to complete the “exchange” experience.

YaWen Yang, another VMA senior, said, “I really enjoyed the time with the exchange program, especially getting to know the students from the other Benedictine school. I’m really glad that I got to show them our school and the Cincinnati area.” The exchange was a huge success, according to Sister Eileen, who said that now, she has “kids approaching (her) asking if they can be a part of the program, seeing how fun and how good it was— to make new friends from other parts of the country and have those kinds of relationships.”
‘Fully alive’ NCYC youth challenged to celebrate mysteries of faith, science and self

Natalie Hoefer OLY|News
Grace Stacke of the Diocese of Helena, Montana, pulled out her cellphone and called her dad, right in the middle of a talk during the National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC).

In fact, teens all around her were talking on their phones, even as the speaker stood on the stage. But they had his permission.

“I want you right now, in one minute, to just make a call to somebody in your life whom you love, who’s pretty special, whom you appreciate,” Scripture scholar and astrophysicist Father John Kartje asked of the more than 12,000 NCYC participants, including over 250 teens from the Diocese of Covington.

He began the talk echoing words spoken by Archbishop Charles C. Thompson just moments before.

“The line that really struck me amongst everything he said is this,” Father Kartje noted. “You’re not a problem to be solved, but you are a mystery to be encountered.”

Archbishop Thompson spoke to the teens about this year’s NCYC theme “Fully Alive” in a prayer service at the beginning of the opening session — after the teens had settled down from a rousing concert by Christian rock band For KING + COUNTRY.

He quoted his “favorite line” from Pope Francis’ encyclical, “Laudato Si’.” Rather than a problem to be solved, the world is a joyful mystery to be contemplated with gladness and praise.

“We heard that beautiful reading about creation from the Book of Genesis,” Archbishop Thompson said of the beginning of the prayer service. “But the ultimate part of that creation is when God created humanity, when God created us. We are part of that creation that’s been given life by the Spirit breathing into us, by the Word taking root in us, claiming us as his own.

“And so no one here is a problem to be solved, but is to be contemplated as a joyful mystery with gladness and praise.”

“Whatever pains in our lives, whatever is going on, whatever hurts, whatever guilt, whatever fears, whatever anxieties, whatever it is — that does not define us.”

Father Kartje picked up where Archbishop Thompson left off — speaking about the NCYC theme.

“If you talk about being fully alive, I can’t think of a better way to get at what that actually looks like in our world today than to look at this interaction between faith and science,” he said. With doctorates in Scripture and astrophysics, the current rector and president of the University of St. Mary of the Lake/Mundelein Seminary in Mundelein, Illinois, is an expert on both topics.

He quoted John 1:1: “All things came into being through him. Without him, not one thing came to be.”

“A hundred billion galaxies exist,” Father Kartje said. “That very same God of creation is the same God of creation is the same God of your lives.”

“A hundred billion galaxies exist,” Father Kartje said. “That very same God of creation is the same God of your lives.”

Meanwhile, through the new Webb Telescope “you can see the world that goes all the way back to Genesis,” he said. “It’s the world that goes back to the life that is in us. That is a monstrosity all its own, these beautiful images from the Webb Telescope, to look at them for who Jesus is precisely because he is the one through whom all of that glorious astronomy is possible.”

To gaze upon the universe or to gaze upon Christ in the Eucharist, said Father Kartje, “is literally to let yourself be gazed upon by the one who delights in your very existence.”

As for his request for the more than 12,000 youths to call someone they love, Father Kartje explained the connection to faith and science.

“The person you called is probably feeling loved right now,” he said. “The reason something special happened at that connection is because of what you see in the monstrosity. That’s why Christ came into the world — the one who does all of this is love.”
Bishop exhorts youths at NCYC closing Mass to choose ‘joy over fear’

Sean Gallagher
The Criterion

The joyful shouts of 12,000 Catholic teens from across the country echoed loudly during the two-hour closing Mass of the National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC) on Nov 18 in Lucas Oil Stadium in Indianapolis.

Bishop Joseph A. Espaillat, an auxiliary bishop of the Archdiocese of New York, described the scene well during his homily in which he often led a loud call-and-response dialogue with the youths.

The congregation responded immediately with a deafening, “Amen!”

“Did you hear that? I think that was louder than a Colts game,” said Bishop Espaillat from the floor of the stadium where the city’s National Football League team plays its home games.

Bishop Andrew H. Cozzens of Crookston, Minn., was the principal celebrant of the Mass. He was joined by 17 concelebrating bishops, including Indianapolis Archbishop Charles C. Thompson and Covington Bishop John Iffert and more than a hundred concelebrating priests.

While Bishop Espaillat had many moments of fun and laughter during his homily, he also gave important messages to his listeners to take with them as they returned to their homes across the country.

The first was that they were called to put “joy over fear.” In explaining this, Bishop Espaillat distinguished between a “worldly fear that creates panic and anxiety” and “a holy fear, or fear of the Lord, [that] is a source of peace and happiness.”

“If we love God and know that we are loved by God, then why do we need to fear?” he asked his listeners.

Bishop Espaillat then laid out three simple points he wanted the young people at NCYC to take home with them.

“You’ve got to have faith,” he said. “You’ve got to have fun while you do it. And you need family and friends and community along the way.”

Bishop Espaillat added that the faith to which he exhorted the youths involved more than simply affirming that God exists.

“It’s not just about believing in God,” he said. “It’s accepting what God gives us, especially through the Church, and then responding by our actions by how we treat each other and the way we live.”

“Faith is critical because it leads us to joy. And joy overcomes worldly fear because it leads us outside of ourselves.”

During his homily, Bishop Espaillat quoted from Pope Francis’ 2013 apostolic exhortation “Evangelii Gaudium” (“The Joy of the Gospel”), in which the pontiff wrote that all believers have the “mission of bringing light, blessing, enlivening, raising up, healing and freeing” (1:22). Regarding the blessing mentioned by the pope, Bishop Espaillat asked his listeners with a smile to raise their hands if they knew how to cure at people.

Many in the stadium predictably raised their hands. They also cheered loudly after Bishop Espaillat told them that “if you know how to cure, you know how to bless. If you know how to cure, you are following what the enemy wants you to do. That’s what the devil wants. But God doesn’t want you to curse. God wants you to bless. So, instead of cursing somebody out, we need to bless people up.”

In closing his homily, Bishop Espaillat called his young listeners to take up the mission given to them by Christ in his baptism.

“We are the now of God,” he said. “NCYC, we are counting on you. Jesus started with 12 Apostles. We have 12,000 here today. So, we can change the world.”

A long, loud cheer filled the stadium in response to Bishop Espaillat’s call. As the cheer died down, the bishop gave a parting blessing.

“God bless you. God keep you. May he continue to let his face shine upon you. And always remember: have faith, have fun while you’re doing it. And remember, hold on to the Church, because the Church is holding on to you.”

The raucousness of the 35-minute homily later gave way to quiet, emotional and heartfelt prayer during Communion as the house band played such popular contemporary Christian meditative songs as “Yesuna” and “Lord, I need you.”

As the Mass closed, the rejoicing returned, with flashes of light on smartphones lighting up the floor and stands in the stadium. When the closing procession was over, the band began playing upbeat music and teens rushed forward to celebrate as close to the stage as they could get.

Zach Spahr, a member of Immaculate Heart of Mary Parish in Indianapolis, was proud that so many of his Catholic peers from across the country had come to celebrate their faith.

“There are a lot of times when I think that Indy is not really the best place,” said Zach in a concourse of the stadium after the liturgy. “But then you see something like this and it’s like, ‘What a great place to live.’ There’s a little bit of pride.”

He spoke about how he, as a Catholic, sometimes feels alone at North Central High School in Indianapolis where he’s a student.

“So, seeing that there are so many other Catholics across the country is important to me,” Zach said.

The jubilation of the 12,000 young Catholics at the closing Mass confirmed that conviction in Ean Nelson, a sophomore from the Diocese of Des Moines, Iowa.

“It was something like I’d never seen before,” he said of the closing Mass. “It’s something that I’ll never forget. It was cool being able to see that I’m not alone.”

For Ean, NCYC was life-changing.

“I’m going to be more aware of myself, more happy and full of the Lord.”
The weekly TV Mass from the Cathedral Basilica of the Assumption is broadcast locally on The CW, Sundays, noon to 1 p.m. Viewers can tune-in on the following channels: antenna 12.2; Spectrum 117 or 25; Cincinnati Bell 17 or 517; and DirecTV 25.

Parish Kitchen needs your help. Parish Kitchen needs new sleeping bags and new blankets for guests. Many of our brothers and sisters spend these long winter nights in unheated spaces or outdoors. Your gift of new sleeping bags and blankets will not only warm their hearts and souls but may even save their lives. Treats for Troops

Third grade students at St. Joseph School, Cold Spring, came up with an idea to distribute all the candy that was left over from a too cold Halloween. They decided to donate to soldiers who are keeping people safe. The students invited their friends and peers to collect wrapped candy and bring it in to donate to Soldiers’ Angel Treats for Troops!

Prepare for Sunday Mass

Nov. 26 — Our Lord Jesus Christ, King of the Universe (Matt 25:31-46)

This last Sunday of the liturgical year celebrates the feast of Christ the King. This year’s Gospel looks at the Last Judgment, where there is only one criterion: our acts of compassion. Jesus identified with the hungry, thirsty, lonely, sick, naked and imprisoned. He resides in the least of these. We serve Jesus when we serve them.

What can you do to help the hungry, thirsty and lonely?
Deacon Jim Fortner and Father Michael Hennigen process in for the NCYC send-off Mass at Covington Catholic High School. Both also accompanied the youth to the conference in Indianapolis.

Isaak Isaak, co-director, Office of Catechesis and Evangelization; St. Joseph the Worker Sister Patricia Jean Cushing and Deacon Jerry Franzen are three of the many adult leaders who have been a part of the diocese’s Youth Ministry for decades. NCYC 2023 was no exception.

Emerson Heim, Ollie Bentley and Alex Code from Bishop Brossart High School met other Catholic high schoolers from around the nation while trading hats at NCYC. This is a tradition that serves as a fun conversation starter for teens. Ollie Bentley said, “The speakers and the music made it feel like Jesus was being revived in me.”

Students from St. Henry District High School shared inspiring quotes that have stuck with since their return from NCYC:

- Cami Spellman: “If we want to be alive, we cannot be afraid.”
- Maddie Ritchie: “Love is not an ‘extra’ in our lives, it is our lives.”
- Sophie Ernst: “Prayer knows no boundaries and extends to one’s enemies.”
- Mikah Breetz: “You carry my weakness, my sickness, my brokenness all on your shoulders.”
- Sophie Ernst: “You are not a problem to be solved, but a mystery to be encountered.”

Jake Kleier, Religion teacher, and students from Covington Catholic High School arrive for Mass at Lucas Oil Stadium. “NCYC was such a moving weekend. It was so powerful to be a witness to our faith with 12,000 other youth while we all worshipped God together,” said Mr. Kleier.

Psalm 23:2
The Eucharist is the “source and summit” of Christian life—hospitals need extraordi- nary ministers to bring it to the hospitalized

Maura Baker
Staff Writer

For the better part of the past two years, Deacon Tom Murrin has served as the chaplain at St. Elizabeth hospital, Fort Thomas.

Prior to the COVID-19 pandemic, the hospital had a number of Eucharistic ministers, a pool of mostly retired people, who brought the Eucharist to those hospitalized.

“When COVID hit,” Deacon Murrin said, “we were told that we could not have outside people coming into the hospital—so, we lost our pool of Eucharistic ministers, and we’re trying to get them back.” Not necessarily the same people, Deacon Murrin explained, as many of those who served pre-COVID were in their 70’s and decided not to return to ministering following the pandemic, but instead, St. Elizabeth is seeking new ministers to bring the Eucharist to those who are sick and hospitalized.

“We do have a shortage of Eucharistic ministers,” said Deacon Murrin. “All three of the hospitals—Florence, Edgewood and Fort Thomas—are in need.”

Beth Schopf, a retiree and parishioner of St. Philip parish in Melbourne, was one of the people who responded to the call for ministers—having seen a message in her parish bulletin earlier this year.

“Very humbling to be able to bring Jesus to people, Ms. Schopf commented, “I find people are very receptive—the majority want to receive Communion when they’re in the hospital. I’m happy that I am able to do that for them.”

She continued, saying, “there’s no better gift we can take to them for healing.”

Eucharistic ministers in hospitals need to be approved ministers in their parishes, explains Deacon Murrin—confirmed adults, but those interested in volunteering can contact the volunteer coordinator at their local St. Elizabeth hospital.

The Eucharist is the “source and summit of Christian life,” Deacon Murrin said, quoting the Second Vatican Council. “It’s rewarding to bring people the Eucharist. Eucharist is part of the healing of people.”

‘Play reminds us of joy, the joy of the Lord’

Father Patrick Kelly, SJ
Catholic News Service

What difference does a Catholic approach to sport make? Such reflection will benefit not only Catholics but also the wider culture and sport itself.

The following are four themes from the Catholic heritage that can make a difference in how Catholics and others approach sports.

Play is accepted in cultural expressions and taken seriously intellectually.

According to St. Thomas Aquinas, there can be “a virtue about games.” For him, virtue had to do with moderation. A person should not work or study all the time, but needs time for recreation, which play and games provide. For Thomas, play is not merely a means to an end, but “an end in itself” so that the person can get back to work and be more productive. Rather, it is engaged in for its own sake. As he put it, “the only thing that is sought in play is the soul’s delight.” The enjoyment of play does have an end, however, and that is the restoration and re-creation of the human person.

Thomas’ thought had a significant influence on late medieval preaching about games and sport and on the Eucharist to those hospitalized.

The human being is created in the image and likeness of God.

This understanding of the human being is the foundation for the emphasis in Catholic social teaching on the unity of the human family. The popes have emphasized that sports competitions provide the opportunity for people from different cultures, races and religions to encounter one another as members of the same human family.

Bishop Bernard J. Sheil, who founded the Catholic Youth Organization in Chicago in 1930, is a good model in this regard. In one of the most segregated cities in the United States, the CYO provided a context for young people from different socioeconomic, racial and religious backgrounds to encounter one another.

Cardinal Blase J. Cupich has called for a revitalization of the CYO in Chicago as a way to bring young people of different backgrounds together and address discrimination, poverty and gun violence.

This understanding of the human being is also the foundation for the emphasis in Catholic social teaching on the dignity of the human person. According to the popes, the dignity of the person needs to be respected when it comes to the consideration of sport practices and policies.

As St. John Paul II put it, “sport is at the service of the person, and not the person at the service of sport.” He pointed out that sport serves the person when it leads to

Staying healthy this flu season

NKYHealth Contributor

It’s COVID, cold and flu season, that time of year when noses run, bodies ache and people become overwhelmed with a general feeling of “blah.” The good news is, there’s help. With some common sense and a few tips, you can get well and stay healthy.

The first thing you need to know is that COVID is still here, and it’s not going away. It’s no longer a national health emergency, but it is part of the respiratory illness scene. Each year it will produce variants that we will have to deal with, just like the flu. And it can still be dangerous—ever deadly—to those who are elderly or immuno-compromised, just like the flu. So the approach of the Northern Kentucky Health Department is to bring COVID into the mix and categorize it as part of an expanded COVID, cold and flu Season.

While many of the tips to fighting COVID, colds and flu might fall under the category of common sense, it helps to be reminded of what to do. In general, just take it easy. No matter how hard you try to ignore or pretend you don’t have the viruses, they aren’t going away. They have to run their course. If you don’t rest and give your immune system the strength to fight, it just might take even longer.

Therefore, when dealing with them, be proactive and plan ahead. Get a vaccine. Vaccines are safe and proven effective. They can help prevent you from getting sick, or at least minimize the duration and effects of your illness.

Stay home. If you don’t feel well, help yourself and protect others by staying home. Curl up under a blanket. Drink some tea. Take a nap. You’ll feel better, and your coworkers and friends will thank you for not sharing your germs.

Keep it clean. Good hygiene is always a good practice, but it’s especially true when you’re sick. Cover your cough or sneeze. Wash your hands often. Clean commonly touched surfaces. Avoid touching your eyes, nose or mouth.

Take (Over the) Counter Measures. Numerous over-the-counter medicines exist that can help ease the symptoms of COVID, colds and flu, from fever reducers to nausea medicine to pain relievers to help with body aches. Identify your symptoms and then search the pharmacy shelves.

See your doctor. If your symptoms don’t improve within a week, schedule a visit (or Zoom call) with your doctor, who may prescribe something stronger than OTC medicines. Only you know when you’ve reached that point.

Protect Others. Nobody likes isolating. Nobody likes not being able to socialize. Certainly nobody likes wearing masks. But nobody also likes knowing they were the one who got someone else sick, especially if that person is vulnerable. Think of others. There will always be another party of family gathering. You can learn more at NKYHealth.org/covid-cold-and-flu, including how to tell if you have COVID or the flu, where to get vaccinated, and even a flu fighting guide for parents.

What is hope?” Hope is an optimistic state of mind that is based on an expectation of positive outcomes with respect to events and circumstances in one’s life or the world at large.

Holidays can be particularly difficult for individuals who have lost a loved one, especially within the first year of their passing. During a time when everyone is expected to be joyful and celebrating, those who are grieving may be more susceptible to illness and needs proper nourishment to have fun.

Holidays can also be particularly challenging for individuals with substance use disorders. Excessive use of drugs or alcohol will only compound the painful feelings, not eliminate them. Be cautious not to overindulge in order to bury your pain.

Confide in someone. Consider having an escape plan in place in case you feel the need to leave a gathering. Share your plan with a trusted friend or relative for support.

During the holiday season, these tips can bring hope and peace to you and your family.

1. Be gentle with yourself. This holiday season will be different than any other you’ve experienced. Accept your limitations. You can’t do it all. Allow others to help you with holiday tasks.
2. Give yourself permission to feel good, to laugh and have fun.
3. Take care of yourself physically. A grieving body is more susceptible to illness and needs proper nourishment and rest. Your body needs these things to restore and support your physical, mental and emotional energy.
4. Be mindful of substance consumption. Excessive use of drugs or alcohol will only compound the painful feelings, not eliminate them. Be cautious not to overindulge in order to bury your pain.
5. Confide in someone. Consider having an escape plan in place in case you feel the need to leave a gathering. Share your plan with a trusted friend or relative for support.

St. Charles’ ministry has always been to give back to the greater community and to identify and strive to meet the current and pressing needs of seniors and their families. In keeping with this focus, two years ago St. Charles expanded beyond its Farrell Drive campus, to establish a Senior Resource Center in Latonia to assist seniors and their families in navigating the maze of senior services and to help them access the services that meet their individual needs. The reality is that this is not something people think about until the need becomes personal and immediate.

Almost daily, Margie Volpenhein, LSW, and Britney Landers, Senior Resource Liaisons, who staff the Center, have seen an increase in the number of persons seeking assistance. In these past two years, the Senior Resource Center has served over 1,000 seniors and their families. In addition to providing education and hands-on assistance, the Center also supplies, free of charge, needed personal care items and equipment that many cannot afford – the major requests have been for mobility and adaptive devices such as walkers, wheelchairs, shower chairs and safety bars. Alarmingly, many persons come to us in need of food, because they lack the knowledge or ability to access entities that could meet this need. In these cases, the Center helps to supply food while educating the person in need, how to access food banks, Meals on Wheels, etc. The Center’s staff says that although their role involves being confronted multiple times a day with the reality of great needs, they consider themselves very blessed to have the opportunity to minister to seniors through patient listening, timely assistance, and most of all, through compassionate understanding.

The St. Charles Senior Resource Center’s services are free of charge, and staff can be reached by phone, email or by stopping in at the Center, located at 3705 Winston Ave., Latonia, KY. The Center is open Monday through Friday from 8:00 a.m. through 4:30 p.m. Our phone number is (859)261-0746. Our email address is Seniorresource@stcharlescommunity.org.
Handling grief during the holidays and beyond

Colonial Heights Senior Living
Contributor

The Holidays can be hard to get through during the best of times. The hustle and bustle can be overwhelming. Family and yearly traditions, expectations, social events and “cheer”, the Season can blindside you. You can lessen the emotional impact by being prepared.

If you have experienced the recent loss of a loved one, there are tools that can help enable you to not only survive the coming holidays, but also to face them with a measure of peace and assurance.

At many Senior Living Communities, they are very cognizant of trying to temper the holidays with understanding and patience. At Colonial Heights Senior Living, a Northern Kentucky Senior Community, they have begun a Grief Share group that has made a difference in lives of our residents, as well as our community at large.

It starts with a luncheon and a Grief Share session right before Thanksgiving. It is an opportunity to have a meal together and share their stories. This is a tradition that began for residents and they have recently opened it up to include the public.

This program has been so successful that after Colonial Heights’ Holiday Seminar, Colonial Heights will provide a weekly Grief Share Support Group for people grieving the death of a family member or friend.

At Grief Share you will discover:
- How to handle the overwhelming emotions.
- Where to find the strength to go on.
- What to expect in the days to come.
- How to grieve in a way that is healthy and suited your needs.
- What the Bible says about death, grief and heaven.

The family at Colonial Heights have faced the death of a loved one before and you can be assured that there is real help because they really do care as you face tough, debilitating emotions. You are grieving deeply because you loved deeply.

You will make it through and you can find comfort, healing and hope again, even amid the grief, pain and tears.

Taking the step to come to Grief Share at Colonial is difficult, but it may be one of the best decisions you will make as you seek to survive and heal from grief.

To obtain more information about this program please contact our Wellness Director, Pam Asher at (859) 525-6900 ext. 104.

Sacrament of the sick: Amazing grace

David Gibson
Catholic News Service

Sickness can be nothing less than dumbfounding. Perhaps without warning it strikes a friend or relative, someone who last month appeared entirely healthy. Its arrival stuns us.

Initially we may feel helplessly at a loss, neither knowing what to do, what to say to this person or how to say it. The sacrament of the anointing of the sick is for people like this—all of them, though in different ways.

First, it is a healing force for good in the life of someone who is seriously ill. Anointing a sick person with the oil of healing and peace petitions God to strengthen, comfort, encourage and even heal the person.

Second, when the sacrament assembles a small community of friends, relatives and others around a sick person, it serves them all by giving voice to their natural desire to ease suffering. The sacrament enables them to stand alongside their suffering friend and to join in coping with the confusions, pain or shaken hopes a serious illness can bring.

Personally, I never knew anyone who found this sacrament’s celebration anything less than wonderful. Even the parent of a teen whose life hung in the balance due to a dire, life-threatening injury, described how uplifting, comforting and inviting the sacrament was. Mercifully and thankfully, that child survived and thrived.

The very existence today of this sacrament shows that the sick remain a central concern of the Church community and are not meant to be ignored or pushed aside.

When sickness prevents someone from coming to the Sunday Eucharist, the Church’s ministers to the sick come to them.

The reason for this is clear in Scripture. Jesus went out of his way to comfort, speak with and heal the sick and people suffering from physical conditions that caused others of that time to ignore them or ostracize them.

The Gospels show that Jesus did not relegate profoundly ill people or others living with serious disabilities to a life apart.

Thus, he noticed the blind man who “used to sit and beg” at the Pool of Siloam in what today is Jerusalem. Speaking to the man, Jesus told him to “go wash” in the pool, which the man did. He “came back able to see.”

Sacrament of the sick

Later, Jesus went again to look for the man and speak with him. It seems the man was ridiculed and pushed aside — barred from the pool area due to his statements about Jesus (John 9:1-29).

The importance Jesus accorded to sick people was noted by St. Peter in a speech in the city of Caesarea, according to the Acts of the Apostles (10:38). Peter explained that Jesus “went about doing good and healing” oppressed people. A Scripture reading from the Gospel of Luke that might well be heard during a celebration of the sacrament of the sick tells of Jesus curing many people “of their diseases” and suffering (7:18-23). In this reading John the Baptist sends two of his disciples to ask Jesus, “Are you the one who is to come, or should we look for another?” Jesus responds:

“Go and tell John what you have seen and heard: The blind regain their sight, the lame walk, lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, the poor have the good news proclaimed to them.”

In early Christian times the epistle of James accentured the importance of an anointing for the sick (5:13-15). It asked, “Is anyone among you sick? If so, it continues, “he should summon the presbyters of the church, and they should pray over him and anoint (him) with oil in the name of the Lord.”

The sacrament of the sick continues the healing work of Jesus. This sacrament puts into practice the Christian community’s great concern for human well-being, including both spiritual and bodily health. Often the sacrament of the anointing of the sick is misunderstood, thought of as a sacrament for the dying only. True, the sacrament may be celebrated together with holy communion for the dying that is known as viaticum or food for the journey.

November: A season of resting before the Lord

Margaret Rose Realy

Not quite past autumn, but not yet winter, November is a difficult month to describe. Dried grass friends and flower heads full of seeds sway in the late fall breeze, the berries and fruits of trees and shrubs glisten with frost. This is the month when nature goes dormant, a time to be wrapped in restfulness. Summer has ended and all that remains are the products of a season now past.

I remember in early summer the abundant bright-magenta blossoms of the Prairie Fire crabapple that is now adorned with deep red pomes, and it makes me mindful of how the flowering of moral virtues helps produce our fruitfulness. As I go about the garden and fields collecting ripened seeds for next year’s growth, there is an anticipation of sowing goodness; a lovely metaphor from the epistle of James accenturing the importance of an anointing for the sick:

“The thing about being a sower, as a farmer or a gardener, is understanding all that took place in order to produce the fertile seeds that I now hold in my hand. We gather them from plants that had been successfully developed and grown before us. We know what the seed’s purpose is, what fruit it will produce, and how it will feed us in body or spirit. As with our great ancestry of Catholic saints, there was a desire by those men and women who endeavored before us to determine needed to be grown, and how to make the growth more abundant. They tried to strengthen them, over time, or further develop what is not yet. "Just right"—just as we do with those virtues that by grace are planted in our soul.

If a plant expresses dormancy—a time of rest, a time of minimal activity—it will have worked through a productive season and developed fruit and seed; it must rest. Many organisms require this cycle of "downtime." Without it the future holds reduced productivity and impaired vitality—plants don’t flower, animals become obese and people distraught. Dormancy is the time when roots expand; when the overt activities of life decrease, and we become grounded in the soil of purpose.

This is when the true purpose of dormancy develops in us and our lives of faith. It is the time after we have prepared the soil of our soul and planted the seeds that Our Lord has given us to sow. We’ve worked, yoked to the Holy Spirit, and pulled the weeds, strengthened what was weak, watered with the word, and shared what was produced for the spiritual health of others.

Now, like the plants, we rest from active production (our evangelizing work), knowing that the seeds we’ve gathered are to be sown and moved to the movement of the Lord. We are in a fallow season, and all the work we’ve done, whether in the garden or in our soul, settles in for a period of dormancy and becomes the dream for future growth. When we will again “Sow for yourselves justice, reap the reward of loyalty; break up for yourselves a new field, for it is time to seek the LORD...” (Hos 10:12)

We work, we pray, we contemplate, and, by doing so, we grow ever deeper in our roots of faith. Now, as plants produce good results is greater from these periods of inactivity; for we gather ourselves before the Lord, seeking out his embrace and awaiting the next season and its fruitfulness.

Mother Teresa’s essential lessons for living

Amy Welborn

No modern figure has been more revered as a saint in life, so the rapid progress of Mother Teresa’s cause to canonization within two decades came as no surprise.

From the day Mother Teresa rode a train in India in 1946 and heard Jesus Christ tell her, “Come be My light,” her life was a steady answer to that call until her death Sept. 5, 1997. Pope Francis canonized her in 2016. With her Sept. 5 feast day, the church honors St. Teresa of Kolkata for committing herself to bring the light of God’s love to the poorest of the poor.

Her response—has been a fruit, as we can see from the continued ministry of the Missionaries of Charity with the dying, the destitute, the orphans and the rejected. But Mother Teresa would not want our reflections on her life to stop with her death to her canonization within two decades came as no surprise.

“Teresa put flesh onto his presence.”

Sometimes we are even tempted to take pleasure in the suffering, even if for only the brief moments before they passed from this life, how can we continue to think the Christ she met in the Eucharist.

Johnson, who had been written about her, documentary films had been made about her; and she had received numerous important awards. We live in an age of celebrity and perhaps some think that Mother Teresa’s impor- tance lay in her fame; or in the things she had done, because today, that is what we value: huge achievements, powerful institutions and a wealth of attention.

But Mother Teresa’s life and message always stood in complete opposition to this modern sensibility. From the day she took the first dying person into her room in Calcutta, she was a witness to the importance of the small gesture and simple acts of care, performed with great love.

In a world that values productivity, health and usefulness, Mother Teresa’s care for the dying seems kindly but of doubtful use, perhaps even a “waste.” But that is the way the world sees it. Through the eyes of Mother Teresa, each dying person is a precious child of God in need of love, no matter how close death might loom.

Cleansing a wound, sharing food, pushing a wheelchair, or simply being present to another: acts that will not inspire headlines or make a profit, but small acts that are precious because they are “something beautiful for God.”

The suffering that Mother Teresa and her sisters have dealt with is extreme. Over the years, many have traveled to Calcutta to serve with the Missionaries of Charity doing valuable work and building up other foundations and min-

tures of the order around the world.

Mother Teresa, however, always made it clear that there is no need for any of us to travel across the globe to follow Jesus. She said, “You can find Calcutta all over the world, if you have eyes to see. Everywhere, wherever you go, you find people who are unwanted, unloved, uncared for, just rejected by the society — completely forgotten, completely left alone. That is the greatest poverty of the rich countries.”

There are many kinds of hunger besides physical hunger; Mother Teresa constantly reminds us. Even those who are well fed suffer from loneliness and hurt. There are many kinds of suffering — physical and spiritual — and many kinds of darkness. This is where the love of Christ can shed light, and why Mother Teresa said, “Do ordinary things with extraordinary love.”

Gina Christian
OSV News

When his 29-year-old daughter Katie died in 2016, Deacon Edward Shoener shared a heartbreaking truth in the obituary: she had taken her life amid a long-running struggle with depression.

“She fought bi-polar disorder since 2005, but she finally lost the battle,” wrote Deacon Shoener, who serves at the Cathedral of St. Peter in the Diocese of Scranton, Pennsylvania.

Nov. 18 marks International Survivors of Suicide Loss Day, dedicated to those who were affected by the complex and often silent grief of having lost loved ones to suicide. Ahead of the observance, Deacon Shoener told OSV News the Catholic Church needs to be on the frontlines of addressing suicide and mental illness, and understanding their impact on individuals and loved ones.

After his daughter’s obituary received national attention, Deacon Shoener said he “heard from literally thousands, if not tens of thousands of people, predominantly Catholics, saying, ‘The church needs to step up and be more involved in mental health ministry, and support the people that have lost someone to suicide.’”

Part of that mission is spreading awareness of the profound comfort those who have lost a loved one to suicide can find in church teaching on the issue — something Father Chris Alar, a priest of the Marians of the Immaculate Conception and superior of the order’s U.S. province, has been doing for several years.

Father Alar, whose grandmother took her life several years ago, co-authored the book “After Suicide: There’s Hope for Them and for You” with fellow Marian Father Jason Lew.

While the Catechism of the Catholic Church stresses that suicide is “gravely contrary to the just love of self,” Father Alar cited section 2283 of the Catechism, which states that “if someone does make that wrong choice, it should not cause us to despair.”

He pointed to the Catechism’s observation, in paragraph 2283, that “grave psychological disturbances, anguish, or grave fear of hardship, suffering, or torture can diminish the responsibility of the one committing suicide.”

“As a result, the three conditions for a sin to be mortal explained by the catechism — a grave matter committed with full knowledge and deliberate consent — are usually not met in cases of suicide,” Father Alar said.

“Most people who take their life probably don’t have free will,” said Father Alar. “They have some kind of mental illness or some kind of depression or anxiety.”

Deacon Shoener and Bishop John P. Doan of Phoenix — who himself has lost three siblings and a brother-in-law to suicide — are also working to bring the light of Catholic faith to bear on the issue of mental illness, and now lead the Association of Catholic Mental Health Ministers as president and chaplain respectively.

The organization, under the patronage of Our Lady of Lourdes, is a lay association of the Christian faithful whose members seek to be “a healing presence in the lives of people with mental illness,” and to “see Christ in those who live with a mental illness,” according to its website.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, suicide is one of the leading causes of death, with almost 49,490 individuals taking their own lives in 2022, an increase of 2.6% from the year prior. Most of those who die by suicide are male, although suicide among females rose 3.8% in 2022 to 10,194 individuals.

Overall, more than one in five U.S. adults live with a mental illness, with one in 25 of them experiencing serious conditions such as schizophrenia, bipolar disorder or major depression, and with over one in five young people (ages 15-18) gripped by a seriously debilitating mental illness, according to the CDC.

Deacon Shoener and Bishop Dolan assisted in developing the recently launched U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops’ National Catholic Mental Health Campaign launched Oct. 10 to coincide with World Mental Health Day.

While the campaign is still in its early stages, one of its initial goals is simply to “encourage people to recognize this illness not as a condemnation, not as a punishment, but something that is to be touched by the Lord and embraced by the community,” Ukrainian Catholic Archbishop Borys Gudziak of Philadelphia, who chairs the USCCB’s Committee on Domestic Justice and Human Development, told OSV News just before he updated the bishops on the campaign Nov. 15 during their fall plenary assembly in Baltimore.

“Overcoming the stigma attached to mental illness and to the grief of suicide survivors is essential, Deacon Shoener said.

“Katie’s not defined by her illness or manner of death,” he said. “She’s a beautiful child of God and loved by Christ. We need to do better and we need to drop the stigma, and stop discriminating against people that live with these illnesses.”

Father Alar said he himself wrestled with that stigma at his grandmother’s death by suicide.

“I was still in college, so I was old enough to understand the impact but young enough to still be very influenced by it,” he said. “I really was carrying baggage, because I didn’t even pray for her at the time she died. I was more concerned with the reputation of the family and the scandal that this was going to cause.”

Yet God’s mercy is still present when a loved one chooses suicide, said both Father Alar and Deacon Shoener.

“This was still in college, so I was old enough to understand the impact but young enough to still be very influenced by it,” he said. “I really was carrying baggage, because I didn’t even pray for her at the time she died. I was more concerned with the reputation of the family and the scandal that this was going to cause.”

Yet God’s mercy is still present when a loved one chooses suicide, said both Father Alar and Deacon Shoener.

Father Alar cited section 2380 of the Catechism, which states that “we should not despair of the eternal salvation of persons who have taken their own lives,” since “by ways known to him alone, God can provide the opportunity for salutary repentance,” and therefore “the Church prays for those persons who have taken their own lives.”

Deacon Shoener said that when he ministers to those mourning a suicide loss, “the first thing I tell them (is that) their loved one still very much exists ... albeit in a different state of existence.”

“I pray for Katie all the time,” he said. “And I think anyone who’s lost someone to suicide can be assured that they’re loved by God ... and we can pray for them.”

The restoration in Jesus Christ we long for on this solemnity is the overcoming of those divisions between faith and life; between the world and Christ; between ourselves and grace. In “making all created things subject to His rule ... He might accomplish the mysteries of human redemption” through our glorying in obedience to the commands of Christ, so we would become whole in every way through our communion with the realm of God, Christ’s Kingdom.

This realm is “an eternal and universal kingdom, a kingdom of truth and life, a kingdom of holiness and grace, and a kingdom of justice, love, and peace.” Thus, anchored in this realm, the tilt of objective reality bends back toward God and our subjective reality is filled anew with the ultimate, eternal meaning that is the charity, unity and peace of the Kingdom.

Father Phillip W. DeVous is pastor of St. Charles Borromeo, Flemingsburg and St. Rose of Lima, May’s Lick.

The background of the Eucharistic Prayers

Father Luke Spannagel

What is the background for the Eucharistic Prayers? We begin with what Jesus himself said and did. Father Guy Oury writes, “According to St. Paul and Saint Luke, Jesus began with what Jesus himself said and did. Father Guy may have been the setting for the institution and first celebration of the Passover meal, which near the start of the meal, the father of the family or the one presiding over the community would take bread and speak a blessing (barakah) which praised God, saying: ‘Blessed are you, Lord, our God, king of the universe, who has brought forth bread from heaven.’ The bread was then broken and given to the participants, and the people began eating. When the meal neared its conclusion, the presider prayed a second and longer barakah over a cup of wine. This blessing had three parts: 1) praise of God for his creation; 2) thanksgiving for his redemptive work in the past (for example, the giving of the covenant, the land, the law); and 3) supplications for the future, that God’s saving works would continue in their lives and be brought to their climax in the sending of the Messiah who would restore the Davidic kingdom” (The Mass, p. 93-94).

If we look through the Gospels, we will see Jesus often giving thanks. This reminds us of the word Eucharist, which means thanksgiving.

As Edward Sri observes, “Scholars have noted that the Eucharistic prayer has roots in the Jewish table prayers recited at every meal. Near the start of the meal, the father of the family or the one presiding over the community would take bread and speak a blessing (barakah) which praised God, saying: ‘Blessed are you, Lord, our God, king of the world.”' Sister Marylyn served for many years in elementary and junior high grades as teacher, principal and secretary. After many happy years in education, Sister Marylyn requested a change in her ministry and was asked to go to St. Claire HealthCare (St. Claire Medical Center) in Morehead. Ky. Sister wondered what God was going to ask of her next. She soon found out. At the hospital, Sister Marylyn began working in the Business Office. She also decided to register for a course in Clinical Pastoral Education, which she found to be interesting and very challenging. Soon a part-time position opened in pastoral care, and the director asked Sister if she would like to be the center’s chaplain. She felt this was a direct call from God.

Sister Marylyn also volunteered to help the men in the detention center receive their GEDs. She was always willing to make personal sacrifices to help others improve their lives and reach their full potential. Her one desire was to bring Christ to those in need. She considered it a true blessing to share with others the gifts God has so generously given to her. Later sister retired and returned home to Covington, helping in community service at Rosedale Manor as a Eucharistic minister. There she visited many residents bringing them daily joy and companionship.

She was among the first sisters to move to the St. Charles Community, where she made many friends and blessed them with her presence.

Sister Marylyn went home to God surrounded by her family and sisters on Nov. 11, 2023. Sister will always be remembered by her quiet nature, sincerity, compassion and contagious smile. May her love with which Sister Marylyn served her God give her eternal happiness with him forever! May she rest in peace.

If we look through the Gospels, we will see Jesus often giving thanks. This reminds us of the word Eucharist, which means thanksgiving.

As Edward Sri observes, “Scholars have noted that the Eucharistic prayer has roots in the Jewish table prayers recited at every meal. Near the start of the meal, the father of the family or the one presiding over the community would take bread and speak a blessing (barakah) which praised God, saying: ‘Blessed are you, Lord, our God, king of the universe, who has brought forth bread from heaven.’ The bread was then broken and given to the participants, and the people began eating. Doesn’t that structure and content sound familiar? Sri goes on to say that this pattern was found in early Eucharistic prayers and is still present today. We also see this pattern in the writings of St. Justin and St. Hippolytus.

It makes sense that Jesus prayed in the pattern of the Jewish people of his day. What was different, and what changes these prayers for us, is when Jesus said, “This is My Body This is My Blood.” As Fr. Oury continues, “In his blessing prayers, and especially the one he spoke on the eve of the Passion for the institution of the Eucharist, Jesus went beyond the blessing prayers of his contemporaries. He referred to more than the benefits of creation or the blessings of the history of salvation in the Old Testament. He showed the promises fulfilled in himself... At the Last Supper Jesus left his disciples a memorial of his covenant. He left them certain actions to be perpetuated: breaking and distribution of bread, presentation of the cup, together with the words of institution” (The Mass, p. 94).

Knowing more about the Jewish background can be a great help to us in understanding customs and references we find in the Scriptures as well as seeing how many prayers of the Mass took shape. Above all, this background can help us understand even more clearly the longing for the Messianic and the amazing gift that Jesus is as he is truly present with us! As we continue our journey through the parts of the Mass, the notes of thanksgiving and praise will continue to be present, as well as ongoing reminders of how Jesus is truly present with us and why the Mass is such a unique and perfect prayer of praise to the Father Challenge for the week: See how many times you notice “thanks” present in the Mass!

Catholic News Service

The material, cultural and spiritual poverties that exist in today’s world are a “scandal,” that Christians are called to address by putting their God-given capacity for charity and love into action, Pope Francis said.

The pope, viewing the historical and theological importance of this guiding document, said, “Let us not bury the wealth of the Lord. Let us spread charity, share our bread, multiply love,” he said. “Poverty is a scandal.”

Among the 5,000, who filled the basilica for Mass were homeless persons and other people in need who were seated in the front rows near Pope Francis. After celebrating Mass and praying the Angelus, the pope ate lunch in the Vatican audience hall with some 1,250 people, continuing a tradition he began on the first World Day of the Poor in 2017.

Seated at a central table, the pope said that God would bless the food and “this moment of friendship, all together.” On the three-course menu were ricotta cheese-stuffed pasta tubes, meatballs and tiramisu for dessert.

“Let us spread charity, share our bread, multiply love,” he said. “Poverty is a scandal.”

Reflecting on the day’s Gospel reading from St. Matthew, in which Jesus tells the parable of a man who buries the money given to him by his master rather than seek to multiply it, the pope lamented the many “buried talents” that Christians “who hide their gifts and talents underground.”

“Mercy, compassion, joy and hope, he said, “are goods that we cannot keep only for ourselves.”

“We can multiply all that we have received, making life an offering of love for others,” the pope said, “or we can be blocked by a false image of God and because of fear underground the treasure we have received, thinking only of ourselves, without becoming passionate about anything other than our own comforts and interests.”

Pope Francis said that just as the master in the Gospel returned to his servants to “settle his accounts” with them, people must prepare for Jesus coming at the end of time in which he “settles the accounts of history and introduces us to the joy of eternal life.”

“We must ask ourselves, then: How will the Lord find me when I return?” he said. The pope referred to the writings of St. Ambrose, who wrote that upon his return, Jesus will ask, “Why did you allow so many of the poor to die of hunger when you possessed gold to buy food for them?”

The pope also urged people to be mindful of poverty’s “modesty,” noting that “poverty is discreet, it hides. It must be us to go look for it, with courage.”

“Let us pray that each of us, according to the gift we have received and the mission entrusted to us, may strive to make charity bear fruit and draw near to a poor person,” he said.

Parishes play ‘vital role’ in bringing Christ to the world, say bishops

Gina Christian

Parishes play a “vital role” in bringing Christ’s transformational presence to the world, according to a key document on social ministry that marks its 30th year.

“Communities of Salt and Light: Reflections on the Social Mission of the Parish” was approved by the U.S. Catholic bishops in November 1993 and continues to serve as a roadmap for parish social ministry.

“The document’s title points to Jesus’ likening of the disciples to salt and light, called to season and illuminate the world with the message of the Gospel,” the bishops wrote.

“Three decades after its release, we see the enduring importance of this guiding document,” said Archbishop Jose H. Gomez of Los Angeles, chairman of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops’ Committee on Domestic Justice and Human Development.

While preceded by major pastoral letters on several social justice issues, “Communities of Salt and Light” was the U.S. Catholic Church’s first effort to specifically address what they called “the crucial role of parishes in the church’s social ministry.”

The world is a “scandal,” that Christians are called to arise around the world for the past decade, but what has unfolded since the Oct. 17 Hamas attack on Israeli civilians demands our attention and response.

This month, most of us likely didn’t observe the 80th anniversary of Kristallnacht, the Nov. 9, 1938, “night of broken glass” orchestrated by Nazi leaders and instigated by German citizens of Jewish heritage. That night, 30,000 Jewish men were arrested and sent to concentration camps. It was the first mass arrest of Jews. Kristallnacht signaled a change. Antisemitism that had been expressed socially and by words exploded in acts of terrorism and violence.

October 7 may be our “generation’s Kristallnacht.” Our most important response is more personal than public: There is no room in Catholic hearts for hatred toward Jews. If we view God’s chosen people as enemies, if antisemitism is something we have been taught, we must repent of it. Of course, that doesn’t mean we should be silent about ongoing injustices in the Holy Land, or war crimes that may be committed by Israel or any other country. Nor should we harbor hatred toward Muslims or anyone else. Our calling is love.

The world can be ugly yet hope remains. Jesus Christ, King of the Jews, is also the supreme ruler of heaven and earth. He is still on the throne. His kingdom is justice and peace, and his reign eternal. And it can begin here and now in every human heart.

Haiti hospital attack shows ‘those most in need’ pay price of violence

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — A recent attack on a hospital in Haiti underscores the desperate condition of that nation’s civil- ians, a Catholic Relief Services official told OSV News. The Fontaine Hospital Center in Cité Soleil — an extremely impov- erished area of Haiti’s capital, Port-au-Prince — had to be evac- uated Nov. 15 after armed gang clashes enveloped the facility. More than 180 patients — among them, 45 children including several newborns — fled the building, escaping in armed police vehicles to a private facility as gang members riddled hospital walls with bullets and set neighboring houses on fire. The hospital is one of the few medical facilities left in the rav- aged area. Over the past few years, Haiti has spiraled into what the United Nations office in Haiti called a “catastrophic spiral of violence.” In July 2021, Haitian President Jovenel Moïse was assassinated, exacerbating Haiti’s multiple, sustained crises such as political instability, natural disasters, foreign interven- tion and international debt. “Ultimately, the people paying the price for this violence are those who are most in need,” said Jennifer Nazaire, the country representative for Catholic Relief Services in Haiti. With “many people” in Haiti continuing to “struggle daily to obtain the basics like food and healthcare, the increase in violence and the targeting of places that are normally considered a refuge, like hospitals, is deepening a humanitarian crisis that is already making daily life a con- stant challenge,” she said.

MOTHER OF GOD CEMETERY AND CHAPEL MAUSOLEUM

WASHINGTON — Pope Francis will visit Dubai in the United Arab Emirates Dec. 1-3 to address the opening of the U.N. Climate Change Conference, he will be the first pope ever to attend one of the global gatherings that began in 1995. The visit marks yet another unique effort by this pope who — in honor of his namesake, St. Francis of Assisi — has made car- ing for creation a hallmark of his pontificate and has repeated- ly reminded people that actions speak louder than words. His presence, anticipated speech and private bilateral meetings at the 28th conference, known as COP28, will add further strength to his many urgent appeals that nations reduce greenhouse gas emissions, transition swiftly to clean energy sources and com- pensate countries already harmed by the effects of climate change. Pope Francis made his hopes for COP28 clear in “Laudate Deum”: “May those taking part in the conference be strategists capable of considering the common good and the future of their children, more than the short-term interests of certain countries or businesses. In this way may they demonstr- ate the nobility of politics and not its shame.”

Latin group forms young adult Catholics in faith, creates community, promotes education

CHICAGO — Iskali, a Chicago-based organization dedicated to empowering and supporting young Latinos through faith formation, has supported and inspired hundreds of Hispanic Catholics and is now in places like Wisconsin and Indiana, but its founder Vicente Del Real told OSV News, it all started with a small step. Del Real founded Iskali as a small group in 2010. After a parish retreat at St. Charles Borromeo, in Melrose Park, Illinois, he asked his pastor if he could “start something new for young (Latinos) people born in the United States. The pastor said yes, and Iskali was born — organizing annual retreats, creating lay leadership communities, or implement- ing a faith formation program. For four years, the organization started attracting more participants. Eventually, the group moved from Chicago and Del Real opened up Iskali to other parishes. The amalgamation of faith formation with the development of nurturing personal relationships and professional development has resonated with over 1,500 young adults — primarily second and third genera- tion Latinos — who have seen their lives transformed through the organization.

Spanish cardinal urges calm, protests mount over separatist amnesty

MADRID — The president of the Spanish bishops’ confer- ence has appealed for calm following mass protests against the planned release of scores of Catalan separatists under a deal with the new socialist-led government. “I’m asking political leaders and opinion formers to do everything possible to lower the social tension — to work at all times for the general interest,” said Cardinal Juan José Omella of Barcelona. “Any deal that modifies the statute quo agreed by Spanish and Catalans under 1976 constitution should have the consensus of all political and par- liamentary forces, and support from a qualified majority of society. Otherwise, such acts would lead only to greater division and confrontation.” The cardinal spoke Nov. 20 at the opening of the Spanish bishops’ Madrid plenary, which will confirm separation payments for victims of clerical sex abuse. The amnesty law for Catalan separatists was agreed to in early November by socialist Prime Minister Pedro Sanchez in return for support from Together for Catalonia party and Republican Left. It will free hundreds of separatists and law enforcers jailed after an October 2017 Catalan referendum on independ- ence was ruled illegal by the Constitutional Court, sparking prolonged violence. However, 70% of Spaniards, including a majority of Socialist Party voters, opposed the amnesty in a September opinion poll, while police, judicial groups and civil and business associations have warned it could fuel new inde- pendence demands.

Annual collection to help elderly men, women religious to be held Dec. 9-10

WASHINGTON — Most U.S. dioceses will take up an annual collection Dec. 5-10 to help approximately 24,000 elderly reli- gious sisters, brothers and religious order priests pay for retirement necessities, including health care. On November 24, 2023, OSV News published an article titled “Haiti hospital attack shows ‘those most in need’ pay price of violence” by national/World reporter Jennifer Nazaire. The article discusses a recent attack on a hospital in Haiti, which is one of the few medical facilities left in the ravaged area. Over the past few years, Haiti has spiraled into what the United Nations office in Haiti called a “catastrophic spiral of violence.” In July 2021, Haitian President Jovenel Moïse was assassinated, exacerbating Haiti’s multiple, sustained crises such as political instability, natural disasters, foreign intervention and international debt. Ultimately, the people paying the price for this violence are those who are most in need, Nazaire said. Jennifer Nazaire, the country representative for Catholic Relief Services in Haiti, commented that “struggling daily to obtain the basics like food and healthcare, the increase in violence and the targeting of places that are normally considered a refuge, like hospitals, is deepening a humanitarian crisis that is already making daily life a constant challenge.”

In another part of the article, Nazaire mentioned that Pope Francis will visit Dubai in the United Arab Emirates Dec. 1-3 to address the opening of the U.N. Climate Change Conference. He will be the first pope ever to attend one of the global gatherings that began in 1995. Pope Francis made his hopes for COP28 clear in “Laudate Deum”: “May those taking part in the conference be strategists capable of considering the common good and the future of their children, more than the short-term interests of certain countries or businesses. In this way may they demonstrate the nobility of politics and not its shame.”

In the same article, Nazaire also discussed the formation of a Spanish Cardinal urges calm, protests mount over separatist amnesty. The cardinal spoke Nov. 20 at the opening of the Spanish bishops’ Madrid plenary, which will confirm separation payments for victims of clerical sex abuse. The amnesty law for Catalan separatists was agreed to in early November by socialist Prime Minister Pedro Sanchez in return for support from Together for Catalonia party and Republican Left. It will free hundreds of separatists and law enforcers jailed after an October 2017 Catalan referendum on independence was ruled illegal by the Constitutional Court, sparking prolonged violence. However, 70% of Spaniards, including a majority of Socialist Party voters, opposed the amnesty in a September opinion poll, while police, judicial groups and civil and business associations have warned it could fuel new independence demands.

Lastly, Nazaire mentioned that an annual collection to help elderly men, women religious to be held Dec. 9-10. Most U.S. dioceses will take up an annual collection Dec. 5-10 to help approximately 24,000 elderly religious sisters, brothers and religious order priests pay for retirement necessities, including health care. The collection is mandated annually to support the Retirement Fund, which financially supports approximately 40,000 elderly religious sisters, brothers and priests, as stipulated by the U.S. bishops.
Ten years ago, Erika Kidd sat at the edge of a family member’s hospital bed. It was almost Christmas, wind buffeted the window. Quietly, she recited the St. Andrew Novena over and over again.

“Bail and blessed be the hour and moment in which the Son of God was born
Of the most pure Virgin Mary, at midnight, in Bethlehem, in the piercing cold.
In that hour vouchsafe, I beseech thee, O my God, to hear my prayer and grant my desires Through the merits of Our Savior Jesus Christ, and of His Blessed Mother Amen.”

It is a curious novena. Unlike a traditional novena, which spans nine days, it lasts from the feast of St. Andrew on Nov 30 to Christmas Eve. On each of these days, it is repeated 15 times, either all at once or throughout the day.

The novena has a reputation for answered prayers.

The prayer recalls the “hour and the moment” of Christ’s birth “at midnight, in Bethlehem, in the piercing cold.” It evokes, with precision, the moment the Incarnation is revealed. For Kidd, the darkness at the moment of Christ’s birth was reminiscent of the darkness of the cold hospital room.

“Waiting in the hospital, I felt myself to be in those dark moments, just before the arrival of Christ,” Kidd said. “And I prayed that he would come and save us.”

Her request — that her family member return home in time for Christmas — was answered. Prayers of thanksgiving, “We can be caught up in the busyness in preparing for Christmas — going to concerts, shopping, all of these things — but at least this prayer allows us to stay rooted and grounded,” said Father Looney, author of the 2022 book “How They Love Mary: Life-Changing Stories of Devotion to Our Lady.” The priest, of the Diocese of Green Bay, Wisconsin, also hosts the “How They Love Mary” podcast. In December 2022, he posted a video on YouTube of the 15 repetitions of the novena, hoping to popularize the novena and facilitate the process of praying it.

It can be difficult to keep track of the prayer’s 15 daily repetitions; however, some Etsy sellers aim to remedy this with bracelets for tracking the devotion. Even if a person misses a day or prays less than 15 repetitions, Father Looney said that the novena is still efficacious.

“If there can be a specific grace that you request, but then I think there are just the different graces of the Christmas season … joy, hope, peace, grace,” he said. “The joy of the incarnation — that is what we are praying for.”

Father Looney said that what we pray the novena for might be answered in a different way than we expected.

“There is always going to be a grace given by God. We believe, in our finite knowledge, that we know what God should do. But God, who is greater than us and knows all things, knows what is for our good or their good,” he said. “God is still at work, and God is aiding that situation.”

The prayer has an obscure history. Rachel Fulton Brown, an associate professor of medieval history at the University of Chicago and an expert in medieval Marian devotion, said that the repetition of 15 has a long tradition in the church.

While the monks of the Middle Ages ascended into the temple, they recited the 15 psalms traditionally associated with Mary — Psalms 118–133 in the Vulgate, the Latin translation of the Bible prepared by St. Jerome. Over time, these 15 psalms became associated with the stations of the 3-year-old Mary ascended into the temple as recorded in the “Protoevangelium of James,” an apocryphal, or non-scriptural, Gospel account from the second century that describes the infancy of Mary. Although the text does not specify the number of steps, the monastic tradition associated each psalm with a step into the temple.

Brown said that the St. Andrew Novena’s 15 repetitions likely stem from this tradition.

She also noted many evocations of traditional Marian devotion in the words and phrases of the text. The word “piercing,” for example, has roots in the medieval understanding of the Incarnation, she said.

“One of the things that the medieval imagery likes to do is to show Christ as the light-beam. There is a lot of meditation, at the Incarnation, on how he can enter into Mary like a ray of sunlight through glass,” said Brown. “They make all of those beautiful windows in cathedrals to show that he passes through her like a crystal, taking light on without breaking her, so she is still virgin.”

Brown said that there is evidence that the novena sprung from a movement to revive church tradition in the 19th century. This movement attempted to repopularize texts such as the “Protoevangelium” and monastic traditions like a Marian version of the Liturgy of the Hours. Sister Joseph Maria of the Holy Family, princess of the cloistered Dominicans of Our Lady of the Rosary in New Jersey, had not heard of the St. Andrew Novena before she entered religious life.

Her novice mistress encouraged her to pray the novena. She now prays it every Advent in the silence of the convent.

“There is a specific grace that you request, it does really help prepare you for the birth of Our Lord,” she said.

She prays the novena so much during Advent that she said she does not bother to count to 15.

“I pray probably more than is needed each day,” she said. Before praying the Divine Office, when working around the convent, and while brushing her teeth, she silently repeats the St. Andrew Novena, over and over again.
