Why do we do what we do? “I’ve learned that the horrible things I’ve been through really aren’t my fault. I’ve learned safer ways to handle my emotions so that I don’t lash out or keep making mistakes. I’ve learned how to tell people what I’m feeling and that it’s okay to let them help me. It’s been a lot of hard work, but my therapist and my staff believed in me, so eventually, I started believing in myself.” - Current DCCH Resident
